The visit was combined with one to Amsterdam in connection with NRI's participation in the European Consortium for Agricultural Research in the Tropics. The additional costs associated with the visit to the Centre for Tropical Agriculture in Wageningen were £113·97.

In my letter to you of 28 October I gave the date of my visit to Wageningen as 8 May. This should have read 13 May, an error for which I apologise.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Windsor Castle

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what part of the Chester tower at Windsor castle has been open to the public; and on what occasions this has occurred over the past five years.

Mr. Brooke: The Chester tower is not open to the public. It comprises a small number of state rooms which are used for state occasions only, together with office and staff accommodation.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what insurance against fire loss or damage exists in relation to the fabric of Windsor castle and the furnishings and artefacts therein.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 30 November]: The fabric of the occupied royal palaces has never been insured since it is almost impossible to put a value on such buildings. Where damage occurs, the cost of repairs is met from the annual works programme funded by my Department. The Government bear insurance risks themselves, since it is far more economic to do this than to pay annual premiums on Crown property.

Items in the royal collection are insured against damage but not loss. Other contents are insured.

Hampton Court Fire

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what help was offered to the royal household to meet the cost of additional or alternative fire precautions to Windsor castle, following the fire at Hampton Court and the subsequent publication of the report of the inquiry into that fire.

Mr. Brooke: There have been significant increases in resources for the royal household works programme in recent years to provide for fire prevention programmes at Windsor castle and the other royal residences. The total cost of the programme for rewiring and other works at Windsor castle has been £20 million, including a substantial amount for fire protection.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what advice was tendered to the royal household following the fire at Hampton Court and the subsequent publication of the report of the inquiry into that fire.

Mr. Brooke: The royal household received advice on fire safety from PSA after the Hampton Court fire, and that advice was fully incorporated into the designing of works projects at Windsor castle and other royal residences. The household now employs its own fire consultants.

Correspondence

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the average time taken by the Ministers in his Department, including himself, to answer letters from hon. Members, in each of the first three quarters of 1992, measuring the time from the receipt of the letter to the dispatch of the substantive reply.

Mr. Brooke: As my Department was established in April 1992, I can supply estimates of the time taken to respond to hon. Members' letters for the second and third quarters of 1992. The average was approximately 16 working days in the second quarter and 17 working days in the third.

Accounts (Confidentiality)

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will bring forward legislation to prohibit the offering by newspapers of financial inducements to staff of banks and credit card companies to divulge confidential information about customers' accounts.

Mr. Brooke: I shall consider what, if any, action needs to be taken when I have received and studied Sir David Calcutt's report on press self-regulation. Meanwhile, I have no plans for legislation.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of when the United Kingdom will meet the convergence criteria for EMU.

Mr. Nelson: The Government are determined to ensure that the United Kingdom economy is able to meet the convergence criteria so that the United Kingdom can choose whether or not to move to the third stage of EMU.

Company Cars

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals to treat all company cars and company car parking provision as income for taxable purposes.

Mr. Dorrell: Employees are already taxed on the benefit of cars made available for private use by employers. Car parking provided by employers for employees was exempted from tax as a benefit in the Finance Act 1988.

Car Tax

Mr. Mills: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was received from special car tax in 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what is his estimate for 1992-93.

Sir John Cope: Car tax raised £1·5 billion in 1990-91 and £1·2 billion in 1991-92. Following the reduction in the rate from 10 per cent. to 5 per cent. in the 1992 Budget, the yield for 1992-93 was estimated to be £0·7 billion. This forecast was revised down to £0·6 billion prior to the autumn statement, reflecting depressed car sales. Following abolition of the tax with effect from 12 November, this estimate has been revised to £0·5 billion.

Charities

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals to exempt charities from VAT.

Sir John Cope: I have no plans to add to the existing wide range of VAT reliefs already in place for charities and the voluntary sector.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Duncan-Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans Her Majesty's Government have to seek amendment of the Maastricht treaty so as to alter the dates for commencement of stages two and three of economic and monetary union.

Mr. Nelson: We have no such plans to do so.

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants are currently employed by his Department (a) in London and (b) elsewhere.

Mr. Nelson: There are 1,350 in London and 640 elsewhere, based on staff in post at 1 November 1992.

Correspondence

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average time taken by the Ministers in his Department, including himself, to answer letters from hon. Members, in each of the first three quarters of 1992, measuring the time from the receipt of the letter to the dispatch of the substantive reply.

Sir John Cope: The average number of working days between a letter being received and the dispatch of the reply was:

Letters posted	Number	Average working days
Q1	4,409	15
Q3	3,332	22

From November 1992, new targets were introduced for the dispatch of replies to letters from hon. Members:

Letters for ministerial reply on matters concerning Her Majesty's Treasury: reply to be posted within 15 working days;

Letters for ministerial reply on matters concerning other Chancellor's Departments, including Inland Revenue and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise: reply to be posted within 18 working days;

Letters for ministerial reply on matters requiring a report from a local Inland Revenue tax office: reply to be posted within 23 working days.

Running Costs

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress he has made in achieving the target of a reduction of 1·5 per cent. in his Department's running costs for the present financial year, in the first half of this financial year; and what specifically has been saved, by what means and in what areas of his responsibility.

Mr. Nelson: The 1992-93 running costs limit for the Treasury already takes account of planned efficiency savings of 1·6 per cent. of some £0·9 million. The main areas for efficiency savings are staff savings on support services and improved purchasing procedure. Savings in the year to date on the purchase of a wide range of goods and services amount to some £420,000.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria he used in proposing to increase the minimum purchase by parents, guardians, or grandparents of premium bonds for children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The minimum purchase level of national savings products is kept under review. The minimum purchase level for premium bonds was raised to £100 in July 1989, except for purchases on behalf of children, which remained at £10. I have decided that, given the need to achieve running costs savings in the 1992 public expenditure survey, these thresholds should be brought into line.

National Savings

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria he used in proposing to increase the minimum for each deposit into ordinary account with national savings, including the amount required to open an account; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The minimum deposit level of national savings products is kept under review. Since each deposit costs the same to administer, irrespective of the amount involved, small transactions are disproportionately expensive. Given the need to achieve running costs savings in the 1992 public expenditure survey, I therefore decided that the minimum deposit should be increased from £5 to £10.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria he used in proposing to increase the minimum for each deposit into an investment account with national savings, including the amount required to open an account; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The minimum deposit level of national savings products is kept under review. Since each deposit costs the same to administer, irrespective of the amount involved, small transactions are disproportionately expensive. Given the need to achieve running costs savings in the 1992 public expenditure survey, I therefore decided that the minimum deposit should be increased from £5 to £20.

Private Health Care

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what element of private health care provision falls within the public sector borrowing requirement where (a) public sector land or property is used, (b) tax relief is provided on contributions, (c) private insurance is offered as an alternative to pay in public sector employment and (d) public sector contracts are purchased from private sector provider units; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: (a) None; (b) tax relief increases the PSBR; (c) the cost of obtaining private insurance would increase the PSBR, offset to the extent that pay is lower than otherwise; (d) the contract is funded from the expenditure provision for the NHS. This is part of public expenditure which affects the PSBR.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to exempt hospital trusts from inclusion in calculations in compiling the public sector borrowing requirement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: None.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to exempt hospital trusts from regulations on capital expenditure applied to directly managed units; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: None.

Pleasure Craft

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the recommendations agreed this week on value-added tax on the import of pleasure craft; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Proposals by the EC Commission about VAT on pleasure craft currently under temporary importation arrangements are still under discussion in the Council as part of the simplification directive. I will write to the hon. Member with details when the proposal is adopted.

Leasing Agreements (NHS)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what way the relaxation of leasing agreements will be applied to the provision of equipment or materials within the national health service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Provided that the great majority of the risk stays with the private sector, the capital value of the leased asset will not count against the health authority's allocation or trust's external financing limits. In the past this provision has been restricted to leases satisfying a short term need. It will continue to be necessary to demonstrate the value for money of leasing as opposed to purchase.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will reconsider his decision not to publish those parts of Lord Justice Bingham's report into the supervision of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International which disclose the use of BCCI accounts to facilitate the trade of arms with Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 17 November 1992]: Neither my right hon. Friend the Chancellor nor I are aware of any evidence that BCCI accounts were used to facilitate the trade of arms for Iraq. As for the Bingham report, my right hon. friend the Chancellor has already made it clear to the House that the balance of public interest weighs against publishing any of the appendices.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 16 November, Official Report, column 26, whether the Bank of England is liable, as a result of the indemnity given to Price Waterhouse when commissioning the section 41 report on BCCI, to defray any damages or costs awarded against Price Waterhouse as a result of the action recently instituted on behalf of the Sheikh of Abu Dhabi.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 27 November 1992]: The indemnity given to Price Waterhouse by the Bank of England when commissioning the section 41 report on BCCI is limited to any cost, liabilities and expenses arising out of their appointment, investigation and report. It would not cover any cost, liabilities and expenses were it shown that these had been caused by Price Waterhouse's own negligence or wilful default.

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the guidelines for the capital spending, investment policies and external financing limits of the nationalised industries as they existed prior to his autumn statement; what new guidance he has given to the nationalised industries and trade agencies; and if he will place a copy of all relevant documentation in the Library.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 30 November 1992]: The main elements of the control framework for nationalised industries are set out in the relevant parts of the 1978 White Paper "The Nationalised Industries" (Cm 7131), and summarised in the statistical supplement to the 1991 autumn statement (Cm 1920). The latter document also sets out the external financing limits planned for 1992-93.

Further detailed and technical central administrative guidance is issued from time to time, in internal working documents.

In addition, Ministers responsible and Departments may give guidance to particular industries from time to time.

No general guidance on these subjects has been issued to the nationalised industries since the Chancellor's autumn statement. The new external financing limits are, however, set out in the "Autumn Statement 1992" (Cm 2096).

Inland Revenue, Dundee

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of the staff at the Caledonia house tax office in Dundee belong to non-mobile civil service grades; and what right these individuals have to choose to stay with the Inland Revenue in Dundee, and to refuse a compulsory transfer to an office outwith Dundee.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 30 November 1992]: Twenty four of the staff at Dundee 4 Inland Revenue office, Caledonia house, Dundee are in non-mobile grades. Each is obliged to accept a transfer into another office only if it is within a reasonable daily travelling distance of his or her home.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what accommodation is provided in Dundee for (a) the tax district 3 office, (b) the tax district 1 office, (c) the collector of taxes office and (d) the taxes inquiry centre; from whom this accommodation is leased in each case; and what would be the cost in each case of terminating the lease at six months' notice.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 30 November 1992]: The accommodation occupied is as follows:

Office	Address	Area occupied sq metre
Dundee 3 Tax District	Overgate House Marketgait Dundee	890
Dundee 1 Tax District	2 Court House Square Dundee	990
Dundee Collection Office	Overgate House Marketgait Dundee	680
Dundee Tax Inquiry Centre	2 Court House Square Dundee	340

As is common with Government Departments, the Inland Revenue pays an accommodation charge to Property Holdings, which acts as landlord in relation to the Inland Revenue and rents the buildings for Crown use.

The Inland Revenue incurs no cost by surrendering the buildings to Property Holdings after giving six months' notice of its intention to do so.

Independent Taxation

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whom he consulted before taking the decision to close the tax offices at Dundee and Falkirk, and to concentrate the work arising from independent taxation for women in the office in Glenrothes; how many Inland Revenue staff will now be required to change their place of work to Glenrothes as a result of this decision; and what assessment has been made of the civil servants' increased travel costs arising out of this decision.

Mr. Derrell [holding answer 30 November 1992]: We approved the Inland Revenue's decision to concentrate work on tax repayment claims in Glenrothes and four other Inland Revenue offices, in order to ensure that resources are used efficiently within the Inland Revenue. It is not yet possible to say how many, if any, Inland Revenue staff will be required to change their place of work to Glenrothes as a result of the decision: the wishes and preferences of individual members of staff will be fully taken into account in considering this. Increased travel costs stemming from a change in an individual's place of work will also be taken into account and may, depending on the circumstances, be met by the Inland Revenue for up to three years.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Private Detectives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what use his Department and the Department of Energy made of private detectives in each of the last five years; at what cost; and if he will list the firms involved.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Information on the use of private detectives in the context of the question is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has engaged private detective agencies to investigate the activities of British citizens; and if he will list the date and purpose of each investigation.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 18 November 1992]: Information on the use of private detectives in the context of the question is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Nuclear Electric plc

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what conditions are attached to the spending of the fossil fuel levy by Nuclear Electric; and what proportion of the levy is applied to the decommissioning of nuclear plants.

Mr. Eggar: The non-fossil fuel obligation and the fossil fuel levy arrangements were introduced to secure the benefits of nuclear and other non-fossil fuel energy in increasing diversity of supply and reducing CO_2 emissions. The levy is needed to cover the additional costs associated with nuclear and renewables generation over those of fossil generation. In the case of nuclear, these additional costs include so-called back-end costs, which comprise the reprocessing of spent fuel, the decommissioning of stations and other plants and the treatment and disposal of resulting waste.

Loan Sharks

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take action to control criminal activities and extortion by unauthorised loan sharks.

Mr. Leigh: The Director General of Fair Trading and local authority trading standards departments are responsible for enforcing the Consumer Credit Act 1974 which prohibits unlicensed persons from carrying on the business of lending sums of less than £15,000 to individuals. Enforcement of the criminal law on making unwarranted demands with menaces and on unlawful harassment of debtors is a matter for chief constables.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will now make it his policy to publish details of amounts and destinations of all civil plutonium exported under safeguards from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: Information on the exports of civil plutonium under safeguards are published annually by my Department. The information is as detailed as possible within the constraints given in my answer to the hon. Member on 14 May 1992, Official Report, column 170.

Shipping

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total tonnage of shipping constructed in the United Kingdom in each year since 1973.

Mr. Salisbury: Records held by the Department of Trade and Industry cover merchant shipbuilding constructions since 1976. Figures of the period prior to this date are not available.

Warship building is the responsibility of the Ministry of Defence and is excluded from these figures.

The total tonnage of merchant registered ships of 100 gross tonnes and over constructed in the United Kingdom for each year since 1976 is as set out in the table.

Regulatory Measures

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the main measures increasing regulation in any area for which his Department has responsibility, which his Department has caused to be put into effect since the last general election.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Since 9 April 1992, two pieces of primary legislation have been brought into effect by my Department.

The Competition and Services (Utilities) Act 1992 (some provisions have not yet been implemented);
The Timeshare Act 1992.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the main measures of deregulation, or simplification of regulation, which his Department has carried out, or caused to be carried out, since 9 April.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department continues to make a good contribution to the Government's deregulation initiative. Since 9 April 1992 the main measures are as follows:

Nine partnerships have been established between local authorities and businesses as a result of a DTI initiative to make local authority regulation more effective and less burdensome;

The companies Act 1985 (Accounts of Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises and Publications of Accounts in ECUs) Regulations 1992 has come into effect and reduces the burden of reporting on small and medium-sized companies;

A scrutiny of the procedures for approving and monitoring oil and gas field development and production activity offshore and onshore has been completed. Its overall effect will be to bring about a more streamlined system for approving developments and the scrutiny's recommendations will be implemented in the near future;

A new telecommunications class licence, which revoked the class licence for the running of branch telecommunications system and clarifies, simplifies and improves arrangements for the provision of resale services from rented telecommunications capacity;

A new radiocommunications licence for road contractors, which removes the previous need for a separate licence for each contract.

Work is currently going on in my Department to identify a new programme of work under the deregulation initiative for 1993 and beyond.

Running Costs

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress he has made in achieving the target of a reduction of 1·5 per cent. in his Department's running costs for the present financial year, in the first half of this financial year; and what specifically has been saved, by what means and in what areas of his responsibility.

Mr. Eggar: Prior to the merger of the Department of Trade and Industry with the Department of Energy, the two Departments published targets for efficiency savings of 3·7 per cent. and 2·3 per cent. respectively. The running cost allocations to each department for this year reflected those savings, which the Department is on course to achieve. Furthermore, as a result of the merger, the Department has been able to reduce the overhead costs of common functions and services, with savings to date of 60 posts. These savings have been used to strengthen the Department's sponsorship role and to support other priority activities.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the value in current prices, for each year since 1979, of (i) civil aeroplanes, (ii) washing machines, (iii) ships, (iv) cameras, (v) television sets, (vi) motor cycles, (vii) computers and (viii) cars and buses which were (a) manufactured in the United Kingdom, (b) manufactured by non-United Kingdom companies in the United Kingdom and (c) imported into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Needham: The sales information for non-United Kingdom companies in the United Kingdom is not available. Information on United Kingdom manufacturers' sales on United Kingdom imports is given in the table.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish estimates for the average amount and value of fossil fuel used in the construction of a nuclear power station in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: It is very difficult to make estimates of the amount and value of fossil fuels utilised in the construction of any power station. In particular, it is difficult to hypothecate electricity used in the manufacture of materials used in the construction of the station to any particular fuel source.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the areas which have submitted an application to obtain assisted area status; and if he will list the names of individuals or organisations which submitted the applications.

Mr. Salisbury: At the most recent count, on 16 November, there had been 1,550 formal written representations received in my Department and the Welsh and Scottish Offices about the review of the assisted areas map. Providing information about each individual or organisation in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, as the consultation paper about the review issued in June made clear, representations received are available for inspection at specified offices of the three Departments concerned.

Defence Cuts

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 4 November to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins), Official Report, columns 313-15, if he will list those proposals he received for European Commission funding under the Perifra II scheme concerned with retraining and resettlement of former members of the armed forces and their families, or civilians displaced as a result of reduced defence expenditure, identifying those proposals subsequently forwarded to Brussels, those which were subsequently approved and the estimated expenditure in each case; what is the total expenditure for this programme throughout the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Salisbury: A proposal from the Royal British Legion was the only such proposal received for the second year of the Perifra scheme. The costings of individual grant applications are not normally published as they may contain commercially sensitive information.

This proposal was transmitted to the European Commission, and was awarded 1,969,000 ecu in grant towards the design and construction of a training centre. The total expenditure on Perifra committed in 1993 throughout the Community was 50 million ecu.

Major Energy Users Council

Mr. Beggs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the principal members of the Major Energy Users Council; and if he will make a statement on his most recent discussions with the council.

Mr. Eggar: The Major Energy Users Council represent large energy users in many industrial sectors. Officials met the MEUC last month. It was agreed that the MEUC would survey the electricity prices paid by their members in 1991 and 1992. My Department will then compare the results of this survey with our own statistics.

Electricity Contracts

Mr. Beggs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a list of the principal sectors of industry in which large users of electricity in Great Britain have successfully negotiated beneficial supply contracts with the private sector electricity generating companies.

Mr. Eggar: DTI statistics show that the average electricity prices paid by industry fell by 12 per cent. in real terms between the second quarter of 1992 and the second quarter of 1989, before the electricity supply industry was privatised. Individual contracts are a commercial matter for the companies concerned.

Power Generation

Mr. Dowd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) which other EC countries have invested in coal-water mixtures; and which intend to use it as a source of power generation;

(2) how much has been invested into research of coal-water mixtures as a clean source of power generation since 1980 by (a) his Department and (b) British Coal;

(3) how much (a) his Department and (b) British Coal intend to invest in research and development of coal-water mixtures in the financial year 1993-94.

Mr. Eggar: The use of coal water mixtures was investigated by industry during the 1980s, with support from the European Commission. British Coal, with EC support, invested about £1·1 million and industrial companies also contributed to the collaborative research programme. Several other EC countries also received EC support for research on coal water mixtures, including France, Germany and Italy. My Department has not provided financial support for research on coal water mixtures.

The conclusions of the research were that the use of coal water mixtures in power station boilers was technically feasible but it was not economic. In particular it was a more expensive method of reducing sulphur emissions from coal fired power stations than gas desulphurisation equipment. Neither my Department nor British Coal has any plans for further research on coal water mixtures.

Mr. Dowd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much has been invested by his Department in (a) oil, (b) gas and (c) nuclear fuels as a source of power generation.

Mr. Eggar: My Department's expenditure on nuclear research directed specificially at power generation in 1991-92 was £80·1 million. There was no expenditure on oil or gas research for power generation.

Debt Payment

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce legislation to require businesses over a certain size to pay their bills promptly.

Mr. Leigh: Though we understand the frustrations felt by small businesses because of delayed payments, we remain unconvinced that legislation would prove effective. The majority of organisations representing small firms share the Government's view that the effect of a legislative approach would be, at best, minimal and could even be damaging to the small firms sector. We remain interested however to receive views on how an effective legislative framework might operate.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what use is made of Thermo-Lag 330-1 produced by Thermal Science Inc., in British nuclear power plants for the purpose of protecting electrical systems in the event of an emergency.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for the operators of nuclear power plants.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Rochdale (Ms. Lynne) of 2 November, Official Report, column 60, what progress has been made with his European Community counterparts in the development of standards in respect of the testing of cosmetics on animals.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 November 1992]: At the meeting of the Council of Ministers held on 3 November, we secured agreement on a common position on the proposed sixth Council amendment to the EC cosmetics directive which includes a ban on the use of ingredients tested on animals after January 1998, with a provision for the Commission on scientific advice, to propose the postponement of the ban where validated alternative testing methods are not available by then.

Support Programmes

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the support programmes for small and medium-sized enterprises run by his Department with the latest available figures for annual expenditure and take-up; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 25 November 1992]: The support programmes run by my Department for small and medium sized enterprises are as follows:

Scheme	Take-up 1991-92	Expenditure 1991-92

	late payment development projects with three trade associations	£30,000 each informal investment demonstration projects with five TECs	£100,000 in 1992-93

During next year my Department will start support for up to 15 pilot schemes which will provide businesses with a single point of access to information and advice.

Manufactured Imports

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the value of manufactured goods imported, in current and real terms, for each financial year since 1979-80 from (a) the rest of the European Community, (b) Japan, (c) South Korea and (d) Taiwan; and what was the percentage change between 1979-80 and the current year.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 November 1992]: Information is not available for financial years nor for individual countries in real terms. The available information, in current prices and for calendar years, is given in the table.

Utilities Regulation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost of regulation in 1991-92 for (a) telecommunications, (b) gas and (c) electricity; and what are the expected corresponding figures for 1992-93.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 30 November 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Mr. Betts) Official Report, column 345. Details of the 1992-93 budgets for the regulators may be obtained from the regulators themselves, or from published Government expenditure plans:

Albania

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what trading links now exist between the United Kindom and Albania; what talks he has held with that country in respect of such trade; what subjects in respect of trade were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 November 1992]: The United Kingdom's present trade with Albania is small, with exports of less than £2 million and imports of £250,000 in the period to the end of September this year. In part, this is due to the extremely difficult economic conditions which prevail there. None the less there have been several visits by British companies to the market recently which have shown some long-term potential in sectors such as tourism, agriculture and food processing, and mineral extraction. I hope these early forays can be built on in the future.

Trading Standards Departments

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what consultation he has had with the county councils in Wales in relation to the reorganisation of trading standards departments; if the reorganisation will follow the boundaries of the unitary authorities; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proposals he has to administer the trading standards service in Wales following local government reorganisation; what consultations he has had with county trading standards officers in Wales in relation to joint boards to provide the service; and what proposals he has for local democratic accountability in relation to joint boards.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 26 November 1992]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has had no such consultation. A Department of Trade and Industry official participated in the environment and public protection services sub-group set up by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. The sub-group, which also included representatives of the district and county councils, discussed the future arrangements for the trading standards service in Wales. Its report is in the Library. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will announce his decisions in due course.

Business Statistics

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 225, to the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) if he will give a breakdown by region and by county of the number of businesses that have registered and deregistered in each year since 1981.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 27 November 1992]: A breakdown of the number of businesses that have registered and deregistered for VAT by region and by county for the years 1980 to 1990 was published in "VAT Registrations and Deregistrations, County and District Analyses 1980 to 1990", a copy of which is available in the Library or online via NOMIS. For further information, contact the NOMIS team at: NOMIS, Unit 3P, Mountjoy research centre, University of Durham, Durham DH1 3SW.

Girobank

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place the final sale contract documents for the sale of Girobank in the Library.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 30 November 1992]: No. The final sale documents for the sale of Girobank are commercially confidential documents belonging to the Post Office as vendor and the Alliance and Leicester building society as purchaser.

999 Calls

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what approaches and representations he has received from commercial organisations over the future management of 999 calls.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 30 November 1992]: The Department has received no such representations from private sector commercial organisations.

Development Area Status, Cheshire

Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy not to remove development area status from Ellesmere port and adjacent parts of Cheshire.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 30 November 1992]: I shall consider the needs and circumstances of all areas, including the Wirral and Chester travel-to-work area, in the review.

Pyramid Selling

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the number of (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions for offences related to pyramid, direct selling and multi-level marketing practices and advertisements in each year from 1982.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 23 November 1992]: Part XI of the Fair Trading Act covers pyramid selling and similar trading schemes. The only prosecution brought by this Department under this legislation was in 1987. Two companies and their directors pleaded guilty to 39 offences under the Fair Trading Act 1973 and the Pyramid Selling Schemes Regulations 1973.

Oil Exploration

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the marine sites where his Department are offering licences for test drilling for oil and mineral exploration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Copies of the announcements, made on 5 March, 30 July and 26 November, giving details of the acreage on offer in the 14th offshore licensing round have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Applications for the first two stages of the round are due by midday 16 December 1992 and for the frontier stage by midday 9 March 1993.

EDUCATION

Correspondence

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the average time taken by the Ministers in his Department, including himself, to answer letters from hon. Members, in each of the first three quarters of 1992, measuring the time from the receipt of the letter to the dispatch of the substantive reply.

Mr. Forman: In the first quarter of 1992 substantive replies were issued in an average of 39 days; in the second quarter 29 days and in the third quarter 24 days.

Running Costs

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what progress he has made in achieving the target of a reduction of 1·5 per cent. in his Department's running costs for the present financial year, in the first half of this financial year; and what specifically has been saved, by what means and in what areas of his responsibility.

Mr. Forman: The Department's target for efficiency improvements in the 1992-93 financial year, as published in the departmental report in February 1992, Cm 1911, is 2·2 per cent. The main contributing areas to this are the wider use of information technology, relocation of posts, rigorous staffing reviews, and tighter control of support service costs. The Department expects to reach its target, but the data necessary for calculating efficiency improvements are not available until after the year-end.

Acquired Rights Directive

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what estimate he has made of the effects of the acquired rights directive on (a) services his Department contracts out and (b) services he plans to contract out in the future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: In contracting out services, this Department has taken into account the possible effects of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981. It will continue to do so for each of the components of its market testing programme. These were set out in the citizens charter White Paper, Cm 2101, as:

- building, office and support services in DFE's London HQ;
- some information systems services;
- payroll services provided by Chessington Computer Centre; and
- services provided to the Teachers' Pensions Agency by the Paymaster General's Office.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Wia Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the latest figures he has for schools which have held a successful ballot to opt out of local authority educational provision and the number of such schools which have been refused permission to opt out.

Mr. Forth: A total of 574 schools have voted in favour of grant-maintained status. Of these, the Secretary of State has turned down applications from 51 schools.

Higher Education Funding Council

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of the Higher Education Funding Council for England's budget is expected to be spent on supporting research activities in the financial year 1992-93 and the planned totals for 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Mr. Forman: The Higher Education Funding Council for England will become responsible for funding higher education in England on 1 April 1993. The council is expected to announce its funding for teaching and research for 1993-94 early in 1993. The proportion of recurrent funding allocated for research by the Universities Funding Council in academic year 1992-93, before taking account of the transfer of resources to the research councils for the new boundary for dual support, was 35 per cent. The Government have indicated that they expect no significant change in the proportion of funding allocated for research in higher education in 1993-94. Funding council allocations are determined on an annual basis.

Students

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish an education charter for students.

Mr. Forman: The White Paper, "The Citizen's Charter, First report: 1992", Cm 2101 indicated that further and higher education charters will be published in spring 1993.

Education Inspectors

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the expected salary costs for 1992-93 for higher education inspectors.

Mr. Forman: A total of £1·2 million, including national insurance contributions by the Department.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many inspectors are currently employed by the Higher Education Funding Council.

Mr. Forman: The Higher Education Funding Council for England is in the process of establishing its arrangements for the assessment of higher education. In preparation for a full programme of visits in 1993, the council has carried out test assessments using the services of four inspectors seconded from the Department. The council will make appointments shortly.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many of Her Majesty's inspectors were employed in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Forth: The number of full-time equivalent HMI employed by the Department on 1 April each year since 1989-90 was as follows:

1 April 1989—479
1 April 1990—462·5
1 April 1991—482·5
1 April 1992—456·5

Since 1 September 1992 HMI engaged in the inspection of schools and teacher training have been members of the independent Office for Standards in Education, headed by Professor Sutherland, Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools.

Student Unions

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information he has as to the major users of those student union funds received from public sources, including (a) the cost of sabbatical officers and (b) support for students' societies in institutions of higher education.

Mr. Forman: Student unions' funds derive from a variety of sources: notably profits on their trading activities, and grant from their parent institutions, paid out of funds deriving from a mix of public and private sources. A survey undertaken by the Department in 1988 identified the principal services provided by campus unions: these include representation of students; welfare; sports; catering and refreshments; shopping; travel and insurance; and support for student societies. No information is available centrally on the breakdown of unions' expenditure on these activities, or on the employment of sabbatical officers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will circulate to all student unions details of the recent High Court ban on the university of Greenwich students union from political campaigning.

Mr. Forman: This would be premature, since the transcript of the court case is not yet available. When it is, I shall consider the implications of this case.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the legal status of a student union.

Mr. Forman: In England and Wales, as a general rule student unions in further and higher education institutions are established by or under their institution's charter or articles of government.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will audit the use of funds of student unions to discover the extent of illegal spending.

Mr. Forman: The auditing of student unions' use of funds is a matter for the educational institution concerned. The short survey of student unions, carried out by the Department and published in September 1989, found that over 75 per cent. of unions' accounts were subject to approval by the institution. Among the issues addressed in the current consultations initiated by the Department is whether any improvement in financial accountability is required.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to apply charities law on political campaigning to student unions.

Mr. Forman: A significant proportion of local student unions are already charities and subject to charities law. Responsibility for taking legal action to ensure that a charity's activities conform to its charitable objects rests with the Attorney-General, who issued guidance on this to student unions in 1983.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education on what basis student unions receive public and members' funding.

Mr. Forman: Student unions are financed from block grant from their institutions. The Department's survey of student unions, published in 1989, found that half were dependent on this grant for 90 per cent. or more of their non-trading expenditure. The amount and the method of determining grant vary between institutions. In higher education, the grant is paid out of general funds which come from a variety of public and private sources. In further education, the usual pattern is for the block grant to be funded at least in part from an element within the student registration fee. In most institutions student union income from individual members is not substantial, relating to small amounts from associate or live members.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education who is liable for repaying illegal spending by student unions.

Mr. Forman: Where a student union's funds are used for purposes which are not within its objects, officers of the student union are potentially at personal risk to a claim that they have been party to a breach of trust, and liable to make good any loss.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what estimate he has made of the number of sabbatical officers funded by student unions in each year since 1964 and the range of payments to sabbatical officers in student unions.

Mr. Forman: No estimate has been made centrally of the number of sabbatical officers funded by student unions or the range of payments to such officers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his policy on permitting student unions to influence public opinion and to affiliate to other organisations so as to promote non-charitable purposes or charitable purposes other than those of the student union.

Mr. Forman: The Government have initiated consultations on membership of campus unions and the National Union of Students; freedom of speech; and the use of public funds by campus unions and the National Union of Students. In the light of the consultations, the Government are now considering proposals for action. The extent to which student unions influence public opinion and affiliate to other organisations in order to promote activities that could be regarded as outside their legitimate concerns is being considered within this framework.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will implement a refrigerant recycling and reclaim policy covering all departmental equipment currently using chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbons; if he will publish targets for departmental reuse and recycling; if he will implement an equipment conversion and replacement programme for all departmental uses of chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbons; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce a leakage prevention programme for all refrigeration and air conditioning equipment owned and operated by his Department; if he will publish targets for reductions in leakages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Property Holdings, or its appointed contractors, maintains all the Department's refrigeration and air-conditioning plant, under its standard option arrangements. The Department depends on these arrangements to control the use of ozone-destroying chemicals, and to recycle any waste from this plant.

There have been no leaks of ozone-depleting chemicals recorded in the Department for the last five years. Leaks are prevented by the application of planned maintenance regimes. The disposal and recycling of all controlled waste material is governed by the duty of care regulations. The Department does not currently have sufficient information to publish targets for the reuse and recycling of CFCs and HCFCs.

In the case of light equipment, such as fire extinguishers and domestic fridges, the Department observes guidance disseminated by the Department of the Environment. This has led, for instance, to the replacement of all the Department's halon fire extinguishers with environmentally friendly alternatives.

The Department's purchasing policy is to avoid buying materials and equipment that rely on ozone-depleting substances in their use or manufacture, unless suitable alternative products are unavailable. A reduction in the amount of ozone-depleting chemicals used in its premises will automatically follow as a result of the implementation of this purchasing policy.

PRIME MINISTER

Security Service Commissioner

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements have been made to appoint a Commissioner under the Security Service Act 1989 when Lord Justice Stuart-Smith's appointment expires on 17 December.

The Prime Minister: Lord Justice Stuart-Smith has accepted reappointment for a further three years, until 17 December 1995.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 1 December.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 1 December.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

As part of the EC presidency duties, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is visiting Spain and Portugal for discussions with Prime Minister Gonzalez and Prime Minister Cavaco Silva in preparation for the European Council in Edinburgh.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Science and Technology White Paper

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the names of the individuals and organisations who have made submissions to the consultation on his forthcoming White Paper on science and technology; and if he will place copies of the responses in the Library.

Mr. Waldegrave: The consultation period ended on 30 November, and the response has been superb. Over 500 submissions from all over the United Kingdom have been received from multinational companies, small businesses, charities, academia, professional bodies, institutes and societies, and, of course, scientists at the bench. Their responses have covered all the major aspects of science and technology.

All the views expressed will be taken on board and fed into our thinking on the White Paper, which I intend to publish in the early part of 1993. I very much appreciate how seriously the consultation has been taken and am pleased with the way it has widened the debate on the future of science and technology in this country.

Since responses are still arriving I intend to wait a short while before placing a list of respondents and copies of responses from organisations, who have consented, in the Library. However, today I am placing in the Library copies of the submissions from the Research Councils.

Medical Reports

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it the practice of Her Majesty's Government employing Departments to give the right of access to medical reports to their employees, or individuals who undergo medical examination as potential employees.

Mr. Waldegrave: Government Departments are bound by the requirements of the Access to Medical Reports Act 1988 and the Access to Health Records Act 1990. The civil service occupational health service also complies with these statutes.

Since employees and potential employees already have ready access to medical reports provided and health records maintained about them, I do not consider further action to be necessary.

NHS Medicines (Limited List)

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment the Office for Science and Technology has carried out of the likely impact on scientific medical research of the Government's proposed extension to the limited list regulations in respect of NHS medicines.

Mr. Robert Jackson: It is not expected that the proposed extension will have an adverse impact on Government-funded medical research.

As regards research funded by the United Kingdom pharmaceutical companies, I can add nothing to the answer already given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Health, in his answer on 26 November to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) at column 810.

Technology Transfer

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what responsibilities the Office of Science and Technology has for the promotion of technology transfer from the public sector research base into industry.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Office of Science and Technology supports many initiatives through the five research councils to encourage the transfer of technology from higher education institutes or publicly funded research establishments to companies.

The initiatives supported by the OST through the research councils are:

1. The LINK scheme which encourages companies to become involved at the pre-competitive stage of research. To date 30 programmes have been announced involving almost 300 active projects, with many more under consideration. Overall funding for these programmes is currently £410 million, made up of equal inputs from Government and industry. Most programmes involve both research councils and one or more HEIs alongside other Government Departments and industry.

2. The teaching company scheme (TCS) which arranges partnership programmes between companies and HEIs. Able graduates ("Associates") are employed on two-year contracts to undertake a specific project within a company. TCS announced their 1000th programme earlier this year. At present, there are over 400 TCS programmes in operation involving around 450 Associates. The TCS is organised jointly by SERC and DTI; ESRC and other Departments are also involved.

3. Integrated graduate development scheme (IGDS). This scheme is run by the Science and Engineering Research Council (SERC); it enables graduates in employment to undertake postgraduate training at masters level in a part-time modular form. Twelve programmes are running at present; there will be six intakes in 1992-93 and six more are planned. Costs are shared between SERC and the company.

4. Collaborative awards in science and engineering (CASE): these entail industrial sponsorship of research post-graduates by companies based in the United Kingdom. Since 1990 an average of 1,000 students have taken up CASE awards. The student receives a normal studentship from a research council plus additional maintenance grant, and spends a minimum of two months with the company. A similar scheme arising from a review conducted by Dr. J. Parnaby (SERC) enhances the stipends of students working towards engineering PhDs. This new doctorate course will include a higher content of industrial engineering and work experience in industry. The scheme started on a pilot basis in September 1992.

5. Postgraduate training partnerships (PTPS): this is a joint OST/Department of Trade and Industry (DTI) pilot scheme started in 1992-93. In the first year some 50 postgraduate students are carrying out research for their higher degree at the five partnerships between an industrial research organisation and higher education institution.

6. Application of computers to manufacturing engineering (ACME): among other things ACME co-funds club-type initiatives whereby groups of companies benefit from new technology developed in HEIs. There has been SERC funding of about £40 million since 1984-85, and 320 schemes since inception.

7. Interdisciplinary research centres (IRCs): the IRCs, jointly financed by the research councils and industry, were set up with the purpose of performing research in 'fusion' areas which would be of broad relevance to industry. There are 19 IRCs with another two (in human toxicity and brain repair) planned. There are 868 full-time equivalent staff employed in IRCs.

8. Engineering design centres: are based in universities; there are now seven of these centres and many of them have close links with industry.

9. Industrial fellowships: this is a scheme supervised by the Royal Society which manages a two-way flow of senior researchers (at the senior lecturer or industrial equivalent level) in order that a specific research project can be completed. Currently, there are about 5 fellows per annum.

10. Total technology: is a scheme whereby engineering postgraduates work towards a PhD while interacting closely with industry: the project work has to be completed in industry, under joint academic and industrial supervision.

11. Royal Academy of Engineering industrial secondment scheme: enables academics to be seconded into industry, particularly SMEs, to do research which would not normally be undertaken by SME concerns. The scheme grant pays for the replacement teaching staff in the HEI while the academic is seconded. Currently, there are four or five secondments per annum.

12. Centre for Exploitation of Science and Technology (CEST): this body is jointly funded by OST, DTI and industry. Many of its projects are concerned with exploiting new technology and finding applications for new technology more widely in industry. Most projects involve science base organisations.

WALES

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the implications for Wales of the GATT negotiations.

Mr. David Hunt: I welcome the agreement between the EC and the United States of America on the outstanding differences between them. We await the full report from the Commission, but the agriculture agreement appears to be broadly compatible with reforms of the CAP regimes agreed last year.

The need now is to return to Geneva to make the agriculture agreement multilateral and complete negotiations in all other areas, including liberalisation of trade and services and tariff reductions. We believe it is possible to reach political agreement this year.

Mining (Environmental Damage)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the basis for excluding the coal spoil heaps and mine tailings dams of Wales from the draft regulations under section 143 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The uses of land listed in the draft regulations for initial coverage by registers are those considered most likely to give rise to contamination. Current research being undertaken for the Government is identifying, in general terms, the occurrence of natural contaminants associated with mined ground.

Dentists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will prevent the employment of more salaried dentists by family health service authorities in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No.

Smoke Alarms

Mr. Hannon: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his plans for assisting local councils in Wales to increase the programme of fitting smoke alarms to council properties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is for individual local authorities to decide what priority within their enhanced resources to give to fitting smoke alarms to their properties.

The statement will be followed up by an action plan for issue to departmental operational managers in implementing the policy.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce a leakage prevention programme for all refrigeration and air conditioning equipment owned and operated by his Department; if he will publish targets for reductions in leakages; and if he will make a statement.

Salmon Fishing

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate has been made of the value of the Welsh economy of the tourist trade attracted to Wales by sport salmon fishing.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In 1988 a survey commissioned by MAFF estimated that visiting anglers to the National Rivers Authority's Welsh region contributed £2·4 million to the Welsh economy.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was (a) the total salmon catch taken by sport fishermen in Welsh rivers and (b) the total commercial salmon catch taken off the coast of Wales for 1991-92.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In the National Rivers Authority's Welsh region in 1991 anglers reported catches totalling 4,525 salmon and commercial netsmen catches totalling 3,037 salmon. Figures for 1992 will be compiled at the end of the year.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total revenue generated for the Welsh economy by commercial salmon fishing enterprises.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1991 the first sale value of salmon taken by commercial fisheries in the National Rivers Authority's Welsh region was estimated to be £65,000.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales are directly or seasonally employed in (a) commercial salmon fishing enterprises and (b) sport salmon fishing.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1991, 436 people either held commercial licences to fish for salmon and sea trout or were endorsed on such licences. It is estimated that about 60 people are employed full or part-time by owners of fisheries which provide salmon and sea trout angling for sport.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to ensure women in Wales receive regular check-ups for breast cancer.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: An all Wales breast screening service for women between the ages of 50 and 64 years is provided by Breast-Test Wales. In accordance with national guidelines, women in this group are screened every three years. Women aged 65 and over will be screened on request. Regular screening for women under 50 years is currently not recommended but all women who experience symptoms which cause concern can and should seek early advice from their general practitioner.

Community Care Grants

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of applications for community care grants in (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales are successful.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Under the flexible community care grant scheme introduced two years ago, the Welsh Office, in partnership with local authorities, gives grant aid to local projects aimed at developing more flexible forms of community care for elderly people and for people with physical and/or sensory disabilities. Numbers of applications and approved grants are set out in the following table.

Clwyd
Applications	6	12
Approved	6	8
Wales
Applications	54	73
Approved	47	46

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to incorporate traffic calming measures in all road improvement and road building initiatives pursued by his Department.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is already our policy to incorporate the most appropriate road safety measures in all our road schemes.

Shopping Facilities

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the out of town shopping centres and hypermarkets developed within each local authority area in Wales during the last two years;

(2) what proportion of supermarkets and hypermarkets in Wales are currently located (a) out of town, (b) in urban areas adjacent to the town centre and (c) within the town/city centre;

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. Extensive powers to meet this need are currently available.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many further education courses in (a) painting and decorating, (b) plumbing and welding, (c) electronics, (d) hairdressing and beauty, (e) journalism and (f) construction will be available in South Wales colleges after September 1993.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Responsibility for providing further education is currently the responsibility of the local authorities. From 1 April 1993 the Further Education Funding Council for Wales will take over the responsibility for funding further education provision. It is not possible to say at this stage how many further education courses of different kinds will be available in South Wales colleges after September 1993 since this depends on a variety of factors.

Private Sidings and Rail Schemes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the schemes which have been granted section 8 payments for the development of private sidings and rail schemes in Wales during 1990 and 1991, or which are scheduled for 1992, indicating how much money has been allocated to each scheme.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No section 8 payments were granted in 1990 and 1991. No payments are scheduled for 1992 although Ryan Mining Ltd. has received approval for a grant of £4,247,000 which is expected to be paid in 1993 and 1994.

Bus Lanes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for the 12 largest urban centres in Wales by population the percentage of total route miles covered by dedicated bus lanes.

Women Passengers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many incidents have been reported of (a) physical attacks on women passengers and (b) instances of sexual harrassment of women passengers (i) at railway stations in Wales and (ii) on trains in Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many company transport schemes have been established in Wales to transfer company employees to and from their place of employment.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally.

Swn Dwr Farm

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what price was received by his Department following the sale of Swn Dwr farm, Northop, Clwyd.

Mr. David Hunt: Following a formal tender process, acceptable offers were received for the sale on 14 October 1992 in three lots of parts of the former Swn Dwr farm, Northop, Clwyd. The sales are currently with solicitors and completion is anticipated shortly. The price paid for each lot is considered commercially confidential information between the parties.

Running Costs

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress he has made in achieving the target of a reduction of 1·5 per cent. in his Department's running costs for the present financial year, in the first half of this financial year; and what specifically has been saved, by what means and in what areas of his responsibility.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department is on course to achieve a saving of 1·5 per cent. in its running costs in 1992-93. Managers throughout the Department are contributing to this saving.

Correspondence

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average time taken by the Ministers in his Department, including himself, to answer letters from hon. 1 April 1992 to 30 June 1992—12 working days
1 July 1992 to 30 September 1992—14 working days

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will designate the area around Bardsey island, Cardigan bay as a marine nature reserve, in recognition of the importance of the dolphin population; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend is responsible for designating marine nature reserves following an application from the Countryside Council for Wales. There are no such applications currently before him. I understand, however, that the council has completed surveys of the area that will enable it to undertake the relevant consultation procedure.

Housing Stock

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future of the housing stock held by the Development Board of Rural Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I will announce the allocation of resources for the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales as soon as possible. The allocation of funds for research will be determined after consultation with the funding council and in the light of the totality of funding available to it.

Health Trusts

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to provide the health trusts recently approved in Wales with the capital funding required to enable them to achieve the developments set out in their trust application in the time scale prescribed.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Announcements on the overall capital provision for hospital and community health services in Wales and its distribution between allocations to health authorities and provisional external financing limits for NHS trusts will be made during the course of the next few months.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Home Help Service

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are in receipt of the home help service in each unit of management in the Eastern and Southern health and social services board; and what were the figures for 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991 and (b) 5 April 1991 to 31 March 1992.

Mr. Hanley: Information is collected centrally only at one date each year. The number of people in receipt of the home help service in each unit of management of the Eastern and Southern health and social services boards at 31 March 1991 and 31 March 1992, the latest date for which information is available, was as follows:

Eastern board
North and West Belfast	3,606	3,501
South and East Belfast	[1]5,569	[2]5,486

Armagh and Dungannon	1,686	1,687
Newry and Mourne	1,578	1,495

[1] This figure includes an extrapolation of data from 1990 as not all the information for 1991 is available.

[2] These figures relate to dates in either May or July of the year in question.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce a leakage prevention programme for all refrigeration and air conditioning equipment owned and operated by his Department; if he will publish targets for reductions in leakages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Routine maintenance of all refrigeration and air conditioning equipment includes a leakage test. Where a leak occurs or major maintenance work is being undertaken in equipment which uses chlorofluorocarbons or hydrochlorofluorocarbons, these are replaced by ozone-friendly refrigerants. In other cases, equipment containing CFCs and HCFCs is replaced when it reaches the end of its useful life.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will implement a refrigerant recycling and reclaim policy covering all departmental equipment currently using chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbons; if he will publish targets for departmental reuse and recycling; if he will implement an equipment conversion and replacement programme for all departmental uses of CFCs and HCFCs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: In Northern Ireland the Department of the Environment has advised the public sector on the use and reduction of CFCs and halons. It has also worked closely with the district councils, which are responsible for waste collection and disposal in the Province, on the extraction and recycling of ozone-depleting gases from redundant fridges and freezers from all sectors. Each council now has access to a CFC removal facility and any gases which have been removed are recycled by ICI. It is policy that any departmental equipment which becomes redundant is replaced by more environmentally acceptable equipment and I will publish targets in a forthcoming strategy document.

Forensic Science Laboratory, Newtownbreda

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many owner-occupiers have now submitted claims for compensations as a result of damage caused by the IRA bomb at the forensic science laboratory at Newtownbreda on 23 September; in how many of these claims authorisation has been given to issue interim payments; and how many interim payments of more than £2,000 have now been made.

Mr. Mates: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Compensation Agency under its chief executive Mr. J. Robinson. I have asked him for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. Robinson to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 30 November 1992:

I refer to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning the criminal damage resulting from the bombing of the Forensic Science Laboratory at Newtownbreda on 23 September. The Secretary of State has asked me to respond.

In total 727 applications for compensation have been lodged in connection with this incident and 179 interim payments made. Of the total number of applications received 490 are in respect of owner/occupiers and to date interim payments have been authorised in 122 of these cases. Twenty-two of the interim payments to owner/occupiers have been above £2,000. In addition 56 offers of settlement have been made to owner/occupiers three of whom had already received interim payments.

As you may appreciate, many of the claimants are covered by household insurance policies and the Compensation Agency has to take account of this and other interests before making interim payments or settling claims.

Training and Employment Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 2 November, Official Report, columns 47-50, what has been the cost to the Exchequer during the last 12 months of the chief executive of the Training and Employment Agency's visits to (a) Brussels and (b) Germany.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive Mr. Julian Crozier. I have asked him for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 November 1992:

Following the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland's answer of 2 November (Official Report, columns 47-50) you have asked him to provide information on the total cost to the Exchequer during the last 12 months of the Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency's (T and EA) visits to (a) Brussels and (b) Germany.

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency which I do as follows:

Total cost to the Exchequer

Visit	£
Brussels	552·13
Germany	727·95

Cereal Production

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current surplus or deficit in cereal production in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Northern Ireland has a deficit in cereal production and net imports amounted to 492,000 tonnes in 1991.

Correspondence

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average time taken by the Ministers in his Department, including himself, to answer letters from hon. Members, in each of the first three quarters of 1992, measuring the time from the receipt of the letter to the dispatch of the substantive reply.

Mr. Mates: The information is not readily available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate costs.

Running Costs

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress he has made in achieving the target of a reduction of 1·5 per cent. in his Department's running costs for the present financial year, in the first half of this financial year; and what specifically has been saved, by what means and in what areas of his responsibility.

Mr. Mates: We are on target to deliver the 1·8 per cent. cash releasing savings as detailed at chapter 11 of "Northern Ireland expenditure plans and Priorities 1992-93—1994-95" (Cmnd. 1917).

Higher Education (Research)

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of the Department of Education for Northern Ireland's higher education budget is expected to be spent on supporting research activities in 1992-93; and what are the planned totals for 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Mr. Hanley: In the financial year 1992-93, just under 33 per cent. of the Department of Education's higher education budget is being spent on supporting research activities in the university sector in Northern Ireland. For subsequent years planned totals are not yet available as the methodology by which research funding will be determined is currently under consideration.

Nursing Homes

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many citizens of the Irish Republic are resident in nursing homes in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how the Department of Health and Social Services ensures that only British citizens are subsidised in Northern Ireland nursing homes by public funds.

Mr. Hanley: Help from public funds for people in nursing homes is provided mainly through income support but other benefits may also be payable. The maximum income support payable is generally reduced by the amount of any other available income. In certain circumstances, income support is payable to people coming to Northern Ireland from other countries, including European Community member states, which have similar obligations in relation to their corresponding benefit schemes.

Elderly People (Funding)

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funding is available for the elderly in Northern Ireland from EEC sources.

Mr. Hanley: The individual European Community programmes, operated under the Northern Ireland community support framework, are not aimed specifically at elderly people, although the latter may benefit indirectly. As part of an European Community action programme for older people, which culminates in a European Year of Older People and Solidarity between Generations in 1993, a limited amount of funding is being made available to support mainly pan-European activities to mark the year.

Residential Care and Nursing Homes

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the role of the Client Groups Legislation Unit in respect of the Residential Care Homes Regulations N.I. and the Nursing Home Regulations and Registered Homes Tribunals Rules N.I.

Mr. Hanley: The client legislation unit is a small, time-limited unit within the Department of Health and Social Services dedicated to the preparation of new registered homes legislation, both primary and subordinate. The unit issued the Residential Care Homes Regulations (Northern Ireland), the Nursing Homes Regulations (Northern Ireland) and the Registered Homes Tribunal Rules (Northern Ireland) in draft form for consultation on 16 November. It will receive comments on all this subordinate legislation up to 14 December.

Eastern Health and Social Services Board

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether employees with the Eastern Health and Social Services Board may register their nationality under the fair employment legislation as European; and how many have done so.

Mr. Hanley: The Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989 does not make provision for employees to register their nationality. However the Eastern health and social services board does request applicants to indicate whether they are from an EC or non EC country and there are 18,995 EHSSB employees registered as EC nationals.

HEALTH

Hormone Replacement Therapy

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of general practitioner prescribed hormone replacement therapy in each national health service region and family health services authority area in 1991-92; and if he will express that cost as expenditure per head of the female population for each area.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is given in the table.

Note: The data included in the table are for preparations used for hormone replacement therapy as defined in the British National Formulary chapters 6.4.1.1 and 6.4.1.2. Some of the products could be used for indications other than HRT. The period covered is April 1991 to March 1992 and the figures are for the net ingredient cost of prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists, prescriptions dispensed by doctors and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered.

Calcium Supplements

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of general practitioner prescribed calcium supplements in each national health service region and family health services authority area in 1991-92; and if he will express that cost as expenditure per head of the female population for each area.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is given in the table.

The data included in the table are for calcium supplements as defined in the British National Formulary chapter 9.5.1.1. The period covered is April 1991 to March 1992 and the figures are for the net ingredient cost of prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists, prescriptions dispensed by doctors and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered.

Clinical Psychology Training

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps her Department is taking to increase the number of graduates applying for post-graduate clinical psychology training;

(2) what assessment her Department has made of the effect of the level of financial support available on the willingness of graduates to take up postgraduate clinical psychology training.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is a matter for regional health authorities to determine how the training arrangements for clinical psychologists are organised and funded. This includes any assessment of factors affecting the numbers of applicants for such training.

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average level of income of a postgraduate clinical psychology trainee on (a) a nationally agreed salary scale and (b) a bursary awarded by the northern consortium of health authorities; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The pay scale effective from 1 April 1992 for trainee clinical psychologists who are employed on Whitley terms and conditions is as follows:

£11,718
£12,187
£12,675

Information about the current average income of trainees is not available.

I understand that the northern regional education purchasers' group has yet to decide the level at which any bursaries might be set.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what would be the annual cost, and what would be the current charges if prescription charges had been raised in line with inflation since 1979.

Dr. Mawhinney: A cost of about £170 million in 1991-92, and a current charge of 69p.

Only one in five items dispensed in the National Health Service now attracts a charge at the point of dispensing, compared with two in five in 1979. In 1991, over 100 million more items were dispensed free of charge than in 1979. Although the prescription charge has increased, it continues to represent less than half the average total cost of a prescribed item to the NHS.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what her Department's planned direct expenditure is on solvent abuse in the year 1993-94.

Dr. Mawhinney: No decisions have yet been taken about expenditure in 1993-94.

NHS Staff (Pay)

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance will be issued to enforce the 1·5 per cent. pay rise ceiling she has set for NHS staff; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) on 23 November at column 505.

Residential Care Homes

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider imposing an obligation on local authority inspection units to make publicly available their reports on residential care homes in the private and voluntary sectors and in local authority homes; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: We expect local authorities to allow public access to the reports on individual care homes and other services prepared by inspection units, under the terms set out in chapter 5 of the policy guidance "Community Care in the Next Decade Beyond". The consultation document "Inspecting Social Services" published on 2 October 1992 contains proposals aimed at increasing the influence of inspection reports and ensuring their public availability.

Copies of both the guidance and the consultation document are available in the Library.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local authorities have published the reports of their inspections of registered residential care homes; and if she will provide a list of those authorities and the number of their published inspections.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not held centrally.

AIDS

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the AIDS support grant for 1992-93 and 1993-94; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 19 November to the hon. Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Bates), Official Report, column 387, what reasons underlie the reduction of specific grant for AIDS/HIV from 1992-93 to 1993-94; and what assessment she has made of the effects this will have on service provision (a) in England, (b) in the west Midlands and (c) in Birmingham.

Dr. Mawhinney: The AIDS/HIV specific grant is £15·3 million for 1992-93 and £12·4 million for 1993-94. The grant will continue to support a maximum 70 per cent. of expenditure. For 1993-94, the grant will be targeted more effectively on those local authorities most in need of support and the funds thereby released will be used for other important priorities. The Department is currently considering how best to target the grant in the light of individual authorities' needs.

Correspondence

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average time taken by the Ministers in her Department, including herself, to answer letters from hon. Members, in each of the first three quarters of 1992, measuring the time from the receipt of the letter to the dispatch of the substantive reply.

Mr. Sackville: We aim to reply within 28 days of receipt, and we actively monitor performance against this target. The information is shown in the table.

	Average clearance time (calendar days)	Number of letters received
1 January 1992 to 31 March 1992	25·93	4,866
1 April 1992 to 30 June 1992	18·03	3,320
1 July 1992 to 30 September 1992	23·75	4,073

Patients Charter

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will give every citizen the right of access in the patients charter to medical records held about him or herself by (a) an employer and (b) by a medical practitioner.

Mr. Sackville: The Access to Health Records Act 1990 and the Data Protection Act 1984 provide individuals with a right of access to their own health records, subject to certain safeguards. This right has been highlighted in the patients charter. The statutory right of access extends to those health records held by an individual's employer where those records have been compiled by a health professional in connection with the individual's care.

Nottingham City Hospital

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will announce her decision on the appeal from Nottingham city hospital to be allowed to build a new day care unit at the edge of its current site and on the competing bid by the health authority to sell land for a supermarket.

Mr. Sackville: The matter has been referred to the National Health Service Management Executive for resolution. The NHSME is currently waiting for further information from the parties concerned.

Acquired Rights Directive

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the effects of the acquired rights directive on (a) services her Department contracts out and (b) services she plans to contract out in the future; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: To date, the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations which implement the acquired rights directive have not been applicable to any services contracted out by the central Department.

The main functions to be market tested within the Department by the end of September 1993 were published on 25 November 1992 in the citizens charter White Paper (Cm 2101). These are as follows: internal audit, internal management consultancy, library services, office services, selected statistical surveys and support, welfare foods scheme. The possible effects of the acquired rights directive will be taken into consideration in each market test.

Prescribing

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what discussions she had with ICI Pharmaceuticals prior to her announcement of the extended limited list system for national health service prescribing;

(2) what discussions she had with representatives of the pharmaceutical industry about possible alternative ways of reducing the NHS drug budget prior to her announcement of the extensions to the limited list system for national health service prescribing;

(3) what alternative methods of reducing the overall national health service drugs budget she considered prior to the recent announcement of the extensions to the limited list prescribing system; and why, in each case, those alternatives were rejected;

(4) what consultations she had with representatives of the Royal College of General Practitioners to discuss the medical implications of extending the limited list prescribing system to those categories which were included in her recent announcement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The selected list scheme has been in place since 1985, and has helped to control the growth in the national health service drugs bill, without adverse effects on patient care. Extending the scope of the scheme to ten new therapeutic categories will not affect the basic structure of the scheme. As now, decisions on individual drugs will be taken on the basis of advice from the independent advisory committee on NHS drugs, comprising doctors, dentists and pharmacists appointed after consultation with relevant professional organisations, and after the manufacturers concerned have been given the opportunity of making representations to the Committee.

Advance consultation with professional organisations, representatives of the pharmaceutical industry or individual manufacturers on the proposal to extend the scope of the scheme was not therefore, in the Government's view, appropriate. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made clear in her announcement on 12 November, we intend to have discussions with the pharmaceutical industry, and the medical and pharmaceutical professions, about the drugs bill, and we expect other possible ways of controlling overall expenditure to be considered in the course of those discussions.

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement providing full details of representations which she received prior to the announcement of an extension to and adoption of the limited list prescribing system; and which representations specifically support the inclusion in that list of each of the new categories of product which will now be included in the system.

Dr. Mawhinney: No such representations were received.

Accident and Emergency Units

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will establish an inquiry into the resourcing, planning and co-ordination of accident and emergency units in Greater Manchester; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will arrange for an investigation into the number of occasions during November when more than one accident and emergency unit was closed in the central and south Manchester areas, and into the impact on patients; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: North Western regional health authority co-ordinates the provision of accident and emergency services across Greater Manchester. A working party into the provision of these services has recently concluded its work. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Bruce Martin, the chairman of North Western RHA, for information about the working party and for details of accident and emergency services.

Homeless People

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance the Government issues to local authorities on the health and welfare of homeless people.

Mr. Yeo: Prime responsibility for the health of homeless people, as for others in its area, lies with the relevant health authority. Recent guidance to local authorities which includes references to the health and welfare of homeless people is contained in the homelessness code of guidance (published by the Department of the Environment, the Department of Health and the Welsh Office) and in this Department's guidance on the implementation of our care in the community policies.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many homeless people attended outpatients departments in each London hospital in the latest available year.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the number of homeless people in London who do not have access to a general practitioner.

Mr. Yeo: All homeless people, have the right of access to a general practitioner. To encourage and improve this access, the Department of Health is funding a number of special projects, in London and elsewhere, where a significant need has been demonstrated which the normal arrangements do not meet. These projects are based on a doctor, often supported by other professional staff, holding surgeries in places, such as day centres, where homeless people tend to congregate.

Dentists

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are her estimates for gross payments per dentist in 1992-93 and net income per dentist after expenses in 1992-93.

Dr. Mawhinney: We estimated that the new fee scale, introduced on 8 July 1992, would deliver a gross income of about £88,000 to the average dentist. However, the full effects of the revised fee scale are not yet apparent, and it is too early to revise the estimate of either dentists' gross earnings or net income in 1992-93. Dentists should, however, still receive several thousand pounds more than the target average net income recommended by the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing the average gross payments for a general dental practitioner for each of the first 10 months of 1992-93 broken down into (a) adult item of service, (b) continuing care, (c) child item of service and (d) capitation.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested (the latest available for the last 10 months) is set out in the table.

General dental services (England): average gross payment to dentists in 1992-93

	Adult item of service £	Continuing care £	Child item of service £	Capitation £	Entry payments £	Gross £

Total	51,870	6,242	3,570	9,026	1,861	72,570

Note:

The above figures were obtained by dividing expenditure on the GDS in England, excluding direct reimbursement of business rates and other payments made by FHSAs, by the number of general dental practitioners in England at 30 June 1992 (14,865). These data are not compatible with the data used by the Dental Rates Study Group.

Residential Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will state the latest estimate for the number of places in (a) private residential or nursing homes, (b) voluntary residential or nursing homes and (c) local authority residential homes and express each element as a percentage of the total number of places.

Mr. Yeo: Information which separately identifies private and voluntary nursing homes is not available. The total number of beds in nursing homes (including beds in dual registered homes) at 31 March 1991 was 124,300.

Provisional estimates of the numbers of places in adult residential care homes (including dual registered homes) as at 31 March 1992 are:

	Places	per cent. of total
Private homes	172,800	52
Voluntary homes	55,400	17
Local authority homes	105,400	31

The figures include only those private and voluntary homes which have registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984, and so exclude for instance, homes with fewer than four residents. Unstaffed local authority homes are not included in the figures.

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) in calculating the territorial distribution of the social security transfer element of the community care funding available from April 1993 what assumptions were made concerning the numbers, in percentage terms, of future residents of private or voluntary care or nursing homes who would be placed in establishments outside their own local authority boundaries;

(2) what correcting mechanisms to take account of migration have been included in the distribution arrangements for community care funding with effect from April 1993.

Mr. Yeo: The overall level of cross-boundary flows was taken into account in deciding the respective weighting to be given to the two parts of the distribution formula—whether according to standard spending assessment or according to the current pattern of income support expenditure. A standard spending assessment distribution would tend to favour those authorities most likely to place residents in homes outside their boundaries, and so the less weight that is placed on the income support element of the formula, the less need there is to adjust it for migration.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what allowance has been made for support costs after 1993-94 in the arrangements for community care funding with effect from April 1993.

Mr. Yeo: In each successive year after 1993-94, the amount of the previous year's special transitional grant for community care, including the additional amount of £140 million which has been made available in 1993-94 in respect of authorities' new responsibilities, will be included in the personal social services standard spending assessment control total and distributed through the revenue support grant.

Pharmaceutical Industry

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of the likely effect of the Government's proposed extension of the limited list on the pharmaceutical industry's international competitiveness and its export achievements.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 26 November at column 810. The relative competitiveness of the United Kingdom pharmaceutical industry and its export achievements depend on many factors in both the United Kingdom and other key pharmaceutical markets.

ENVIRONMENT

Environmental Sustainability

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that structural fund regulations are amended to include a commitment to environmental sustainability as a vital component of regional policy during the United Kingdom's presidency of the EC.

Mr. Maclean: Draft regulations covering the future operation of the structural funds are still awaited and it is unlikely, therefore, that negotiations will start during the United Kingdom's presidency. However, when negotiations commence, the Government will be concerned to achieve closer integration between Community environmental policy and the structural funds.

Charities (Planning Applications)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many planning applications have been received by local authorities from registered charities in each year since 1985;

(2) what plans he has to allow local authorities to waive planning application fees from registered charities; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is the estimated cost of waiving local authority planning application fees from registered charities.

Mr. Baldry: Information on the number of planning applications and the fee revenue received from registered charities is not collected. Planning application fees are determiend by the type of development proposed rather than by the nature of the applicant. Under the existing statutory provisions, local authorities have no power to waive fees. I have no plans to allow them to do so.

Earth Summit

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the dates by which Her Majesty's Government expects to ratify each of the agreements made at the Earth summit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We are seeking to ratify the framework convention on climate change and to establish the basis on which we can ratify the convention on bilogical diversity by the end of 1993.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce a leakage prevention programme for all refrigeration and air conditioning equipment owned and operated by his Department; if he will publish targets for reductions in leakages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has a comprehensive green housekeeping strategy in place which aims to prevent leakages of ozone-depleting refrigerants through the regular servicing of refrigeration and air conditioning equipment. It deals with the scrutiny of materials used by contractors, the storage and disposal of ozone-depleting substances and compliance with the professional codes of practice.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will implement a refrigerant recycling and reclaim policy covering all departmental equipment current using chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbons; if he will publish targets for departmental reuse and recycling; if he will implement an equipment conversion and replacement programme for all departmental uses of CFCs and HCFCs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My Department already has a policy on its use of ozone-depleting substances. It is included in its statement on green housekeeping which was published in March 1992 and, among other things, commits the Department to eliminating the use of substances such as CFCs, halons, carbon tetrachloride and 1,1,1 trichloroethane. It also stipulates that the chemicals being replaced should be recycled in products where no alternative is available.

The policy is being implemented through a comprehensive green housekeeping action plan which was issued to departmental operational managers in October.

The Department does not presently have sufficient information to publish targets for departmental reuse and recycling.

Property Services Agency

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those firms bidding by 26 June to take over the duties of the Property Services Agency; and which firms were shortlisted.

Mr. Redwood: Seven firms bid by 26 June to purchase the PSA projects of which WS Atkins; Carl Bros; the Pell Frischmann/Sir William Halcrow Consortium; and Tarmac were shortlisted. Names of those not shortlisted are regarded as commercially confidential but will of course be available to the National Audit Office.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what commercial basis Tarmac was offered the contract to run the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Redwood: Tarmac was not offered a contract to run the Property Services Agency. PSA Projects was offered for sale by open competition and Tarmac was the successful bidder.

Sewage Works

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of sewage works for each water company comply with the standard set by the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Maclean: The most recent information, relating to 1990, is contained in this year's "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics", and in my Department's recent report "The UK Environment", copies of which are in the House Library. Overall in 1990, 92 per cent. of sewage treatment works complied with their consent conditions, compared with 77 per cent. in 1986 and 83 per cent. in 1988.

Whales

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment upon what grounds EC member states can derogate from prohibitions on the killing of whales contained in (a) the habitats directive and (b) the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species regulation EEC No. 3626/82; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to article 16 of council directive 92/43/EEC. There are no provisions for derogations of the type described in Council Regulation (EEC) No. 3626/92.

Local Government Finance

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount of money he assumes will be raised in local authority capital receipts by (a) Wear Valley district council, (b) Derwentside district council and (c) Durham county council as a result of the measures announced in the autumn statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: I have not made any estimates of these receipts at the level of individual local authorities. Authorities have provided their own forecasts of the receipts they expect to receive during 1992-93 and this information is available in the Library of the House.

Rent Arrears, Northamptonshire

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of rent arrears in each district in Northamptonshire at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 2 July 1992 to the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) at column 675.

Travel Times

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures are taken by his Department to promote zoning schemes linking residential, commercial and recreational areas so as to keep travel times to a minimum.

Mr. Baldry: The Department has issued preliminary advice to local planning authorities on how development patterns may influence the need to travel, and promote choice of more energy-efficient means of transport, in "Planning Policy Guidance" (PPG) note 12. The Department will be publishing shortly the results of research commissioned jointly with the Department of Transport on the part which land-use planning measures could play in achieving these objectives. Some of its findings will be reflected in a revised version of PPG 13 on transport and planning, a draft of which will be issued for consultation in the next few months.

Specific advice on locational policies in development plans designed to influence travel patterns in relation to industrial and commercial development and small firms was issued in November in a revised version of PPG 4. Equivalent advice for retail development is given in the consultation draft of PPG 6, issued in October.

Water

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the total number and percentage of English homes directly served by mains water supplies; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the total number of homes directly served by mains water supplies for each of the EC member countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The "Levels of Service Report 1990-91", published by OFWAT, lists 23,594,000 domestic properties that are served by mains water supplies for England and Wales. These account for approximately 99 per cent. of the population for England and Wales. Figures are not available for properties in England separately, or for other EC member countries.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to improve co-operation and liaison between the water companies and British Waterways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The relationship between British Waterways and the water companies is a matter for the board and the companies.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet the chairman of the regional water companies; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Maclean: Ministers have had a number of meetings in recent months with the chairman of British Waterways, at which, among other things, matters of strategic policy and board appointments have been discussed. But the Secretary of State has at present no plans to meet him.

Sheltered Housing

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to transfer the care element of the warden service in sheltered housing from housing accounts to the social services budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: A recent Court of Appeal judgment cast doubt on housing authorities' powers to provide care services and charge their costs to the housing revenue account. To avoid disruption to these important services, we are seeking powers in the Housing and Urban Development Bill to legitimise all housing authorities' arrangements in connection with care services.

The Government's policy is that the housing revenue account should be a landlord account. We therefore propose that these new powers would be temporary only. But before any decisions are taken about the timing of any change in the arrangements, or about how the services would be provided thereafter, or about how their costs would be accounted for, there will be full consultation with all parties early in the new year. When considering how best to implement any new arrangements we shall consider all the financial and administrative issues to ensure that support continues to be available to those who need it.

Running Costs

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made in achieving the target of a reduction of 1·5 per cent. in his Department's running costs for the present financial year, in the first half of this financial year; and what specifically has been saved, by what means and in what areas of his responsibility.

Mr. Howard: The Department's annual report for 1993, which is currently being prepared, will show that between 1986-87 and 1991-92 the Department increased it's efficiency by about 4 per cent. a year. These figures reflect a measurement of administrative output throughout the Department and not merely of running costs. The savings have been achieved primarily by the increased use of information technology and the implementation of more efficient and effective management controls. As a consequence, the Department has been largely able to absorb the cost of additional policy initiatives. Equivalent figures for the current financial year are not yet available, but will be published in the departmental report in early 1994.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the decision of the Property Services Agency International to withdraw from the contract to build the road from Mount Pleasant airport to Newhaven in the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Discussions on the completion of the road are taking place between Property Services Agency International and the Falkland Islands Government in the light of the run down of PSAI's workload.

City Challenge and Urban Programme

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources will be available for city challenge and the urban programme in 1993-94.

Mr. Howard: City challenge and urban programme resources will rise from a total provision of £319 million in 1992-93 to £408 million in 1993-94, underlining the Government's continued commitment to urban regeneration. In addition, the 57 urban programme authorities will have an estimated £500 million in extra spending power in 1993-94 as a result of the changes I announced on 13 November in the capital receipts rules. To complement these resources, I have decided to make available up to £20 million in uncommitted urban programme resources in 1993-94 through a new urban partnership fund (UPF) which will combine with local authorities' usable capital receipts and other funding, including private finance, to promote urban regeneration. Details of the UPF are included in guidance to local authorities, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Wildlife Trade

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes will be made in controls on the wildlife trade from 1 January 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The main controls on the wildlife trade will remain unaltered but the establishment of the single market will make it impractical to retain controls on some imports and exports. We propose to compensate for this by strengthening controls within the United Kingdom.

There are controls throughout the European Community on trade in species protected by the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES). These cover imports from and exports to non-EC countries of all species listed on the CITES appendices and also include prohibitions on the sale of specimens of endangered species. They are supported by systems of permits and certificates issued and recognised by all member states. This system will remain fully operational on 1 January. Within the United Kingdom, we have an extensive system of controls to restrict sales of specimens of native species. Within Great Britain, this was strengthened in October to include a further 90 species and will remain unchanged from 1 January next year.

At present, we also control the import and export of many species not listed on CITES, under the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976. From 1 January, it will no longer be possible to retain these controls in relation to trade within the European Community. Given the future freedom of movement within the Community, we have looked carefully at whether we should continue to control trade in non-CITES species with non-EC countries. We have concluded that it is only sensible to do so where most other member states have similar controls, because otherwise our restrictions could be evaded very easily by routing trade through EC neighbours. This means that from 1 January 1993 controls under the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976 will apply only to the import of the skins of harp and hooded seal pups. We are writing to traders giving details of the species which will not require import export licences.

We are determined that these changes should not result in any significant loss of protection for species which require it. We urged the European Commission last year to bring forward proposals to strengthen EC-wide controls and this they have done. We have made good progress during our presidency of the European Community towards achieving agreement on a new regulation which would extend EC controls on the wildlife trade to more species than are covered at present by the 1976 Act. We expect this regulation to be adopted next year. Further, freedom of movement within the Community will make it particularly important to have effective controls within member states and the Environment Council on 20 October took the view that a good deal of discretion on these should continue to rest with individual countries.

We therefore propose to strengthen controls applied within this country. As a first step, we propose to extend sales controls to some 200 species formerly protected by import and export restrictions and which our scientific advisers, the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, consider would otherwise be at risk from trade. We propose too to review how the operation of all our wildlife sales controls may be made more effective. We are consulting interested organisations about the scope of the review which will be undertaken over the course of the next year.

Personal Social Services SSA

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the children's element of the personal social services standard spending assessment and the area cost adjustment to ensure equity between local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: [holding answer 30 November 1992]: My right hon. and learned Friend announced his proposals for standard spending assessments (SSAs) for 1993-94 on the 26 November 1992. There now follows a period of consultation during which representations about any aspects of SSAs will be carefully considered.

Water Industry

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of regulation in 1991-92 for the water industry; and what is the expected corresponding figure for 1992-93.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 30 November 1992]: Different aspects of quality regulation fall to the drinking water inspectorate (DWI) and National Rivers Authority (NRA). The Office of Water Services (OFWAT) regulates prices.

In addition to its regulatory functions the DWI provides technical and scientific advice to my right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales. DWI's total costs for 1991-92 were £1·4 million, and for 1992-93 are expected to be £1·6 million.

The NRA spent in total £35 million in 1991-92, and expect to spend £41 million in 1992-93, on licensing and monitoring of discharges: approaching two thirds of this is attributable to water industry discharges. The NRA spent a further £8 million in 1991-92, and expect to spend £9 million in 1992-93, on licensing and enforcement of abstractions: the proportion attributable to the water industry is not readily available.

The Director General for Water Services's "Annual Report 1991", a copy of which is in the Library, records that in 1991-92 OFWAT's budget was £6·29 million, and for 1992-93 is £7·52 million.

Local Authority Capital Receipts

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the level of capital receipts held by each local authority at the end of year 1991-92 and which they are unable to spend according to current rates, together with the level of capital spending by each authority in 1991-92.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 30 November 1992]: Local authorities are not required to identify the reserved part of capital receipts from other amounts which have been set aside as provision to meet credit liabilities (PCL). Information on the total amount set aside as PCL at 31 March 1992 is not yet available. The most comprehensive information relates to 31 March 1991: this is in the Library of the House.

I am arranging for provisional information on gross capital expenditure in 1991-92, as reported to the Department by local authorities, to be placed in the Library of the House.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish and place in the Library in hard copy and in machine readable form, as soon as possible after issuing his consultation paper on 1993-94 roles support grant, a table showing for each local authority its 1992-93 standard spending assessment with and without adjustments for changes in local authority functions and its 1993-94 SSA with the percentage changes, between both 1992-93 SSAs and the 1993-94 SSA;

(2) what are the cash and real terms increases for total standard spending in England in 1993-94, after adjusting for changes in local authority functions, compared with (a) total standard spending for 1992-93 and (b) local authorities' budgets for 1992-93.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 27 November 1992]: Information on 1992-93 SSAs was placed in the Library in hard copy and in machine readable form following the announcement of the 1992-93 revenue support grant (RSG) settlement. Similar information on the proposals for the 1993-94 RSG settlement was placed in the Library, again in both hard copy and machine readable form, immediately following the announcement to the House yesterday of our intentions for 1993-94.

There are several ways in which the 1992-93 SSA figures might be adjusted to allow for the changes in local authority functions in order to facilitate comparisons with the 1993-94 information. I shall provide a set of SSAs for 1992-93 on an adjusted basis, together with a full description of the underlying assumptions shortly.

Public Buildings (Fire Damage)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total cost to public funds arising from fire damage in public buildings in each of the last three years.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 27 November 1992]: The total cost to public funds arising from fire damage to public buildings on the civil estate for the last three years, based on reports received by my Department, were:

1991	Nil

To date fire costs reported for the current year amount to £2,000. The cost for 1990 includes £6,000,000 arising from a single incident in a storage depot at Burtonwood. One incident was reported for 1991 but no cost was incurred. Fire incidents occurring on the defence estate are not reported to my Department.

Council Tax

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact on the band D equivalent council tax of a single person discount of 50 per cent. instead of 25 per cent.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 26 November 1992]: On the basis of the provisional taxbase information provided by local authorities for consultation purposes, it is estimated that a 50 per cent. single person discount would reduce the national taxbase by just over 8 per cent. This means that the headline council tax for two adults would need to be about 9 per cent. higher in order to raise any given amount of revenue. For single person households the combined effect of the increased discount but higher basic tax rates would be a reduction of about 27 per cent.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing, for each region, the total number of band D discounted equivalents for council tax purposes form CTB1, row 11, total of columns 1 to 8 and the total number of dwellings on the valuation list, form CTB1, row 8, column 9, and a table showing comparable information for each region imputed from the illustrative council tax figures produced by his Department in 1991.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 20 November 1992]: The information requested is as follows:

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bananas

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the arrangements for bananas agreed at the last meeting of Agriculture Ministers.

Mr. Curry: The Agriculture Council of 16 and 17 November discussed the Commission's proposal for the common organisation of the banana market. No agreement has yet been reached on the future arrangements for bananas. The Council will consider the issue again in December.

Mr. Channon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what interim arrangements he is proposing to put in place to protect the position of Caribbean banana exporters during the interim period after 1 January 1993 before final decisions on the banana regime are taken.

Mr. Curry: The Government are working hard to achieve agreement on new EC banana market arrangments as soon as possible. If necessary, interim measures designed to protect our traditional suppliers in the Commonwealth Caribbean will be put in place on 1 January 1993.

Mr. Channon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he intends to make so as to achieve a successful banana regime before the end of the United Kingdom presidency.

Mr. Curry: I am reflecting on the possibilities for reconciling the wide differences of opinion between member states in a way consistent with our objectives on this dossier.

Correspondence

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average time taken by the Ministers in his Department including himself, to answer letters from hon. Members, in each of the first three quarters of 1992, measuring the time from the receipt of the letter to the dispatch of the substantive reply.

Mr. Curry: In this Department, Ministers replied within 21 days to letters from hon. Members and noble Lords in 80 per cent. of cases in the first quarter, 91·7 per cent. of cases in the second and 78 per cent. of cases in the third quarter of this year. Numbers of letters received during the first three quarters were 1,931, 2,521 and 3,684 respectively. The Department does not hold information on the average time taken to reply to Ministers' correspondence.

Running Costs

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he has made in achieving the target of a reduction of 1·5 per cent. in his Department's running costs for the present financial year, in the first half of this financial year; and what specifically has been saved, by what means and in what areas of his responsibility.

Mr. Curry: The main areas which contribute to the Department's running cost efficiencies are: information technology; staff inspection, to ensure the most efficient organisation of work; and purchasing.

The efficiency gains which these measures provide are monitored and reviewed on a 12-month (financial year) basis, and information is not available on a six-month basis. Information on efficiency gains will be available after April 1993.

Plant and Machinery

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the level of investment has been on agricultural plant and machinery for each year since 1979; and if he will give a breakdown of the different areas including tractors, combine harvesters, and farm buildings.

Mr. Gummer: Latest estimates of investment by the United Kingdom agricultural industry in building and works, plant and machinery and vehicles are shown in the table. Information on tractors, and combine harvesters is not available separately.

Fishermen (Incidental Catches)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many reports regarding incidental catches of marine mammals by fishermen his fisheries officers in England and Wales have received to date under the scheme set up to monitor the extent of this interaction.

Mr. Curry: There has been one report for England and Wales which recorded the incidental catch of three dead common porpoises.

GATT (General Waiver)

Mr. Channon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what agricultural products coming from least-developed or island states have been granted a general waiver from the GATT in respect of their imports into the EC.

Mr. Curry: The draft GATT agreement on agriculture, tabled by the GATT director general in December 1991, states:

"In implementing the commitments on market access, developed countries will take fully into account the particular needs and conditions of developing countries by providing for a greater improvement of opportunities and terms of access for agricultural products of particular interest to these countries, including the fullest liberalisation of trade in tropical agricultural products, as agreed at the Mid-Term review, and products of particular importance to the diversification of production from the growing of illicit narcotic crops."

The GATT in any case provides for preferential tariff treatment to products from developing countries in accordance with the generalised system of preferences.

Horses (Exports)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he will put in place from 1 January 1993 to avoid the export of horses for slaughter under the EC trade legislation.

Mr. Soames: As indicated in the reply given on 6 November to my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby), EC Directive 91/628 provides specifically for national provisions in relation to horses, and our rules will continue to apply from 1 January 1993.

EC Agricultural Fund

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much was spent by the European Community agricultural fund, for each year from 1980 to the latest date for which figures are available on (a) intervention purchase and (b) export subsidy on those categories of oilseeds in contention in the GATT, together with an indication of quantities for each year.

Mr. Curry: Figures for costs of intervention and export refunds for oilseeds (rapeseed, sunflowerseed and soya beans) are set out in the table. I will write to the hon. Member with the information which he seeks on quantities.

Veterinary Medicines Directorate

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 4 November, Official Report, columns 286-87, if he will list by visit for the last 12 months, the cost to the Exchequer of the international visits made by the director and chief executive of the Veterinary Medicines Directorate.

Mr. Gummer: Responsibility for this matter falls to the chief executive of the veterinary medicines directorate. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Dr. J. M. Rutter, to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 27 November 1992.

In his reply to your question, the Minister said that he had asked me to write to you direct.

I have attended two international scientific meetings on a fact-finding basis during the 12 months from 27 November 1991.

6-10 June 1992
Animal Health Institute/Food and Drug Administration Symposium on the Microbiological Significance of Drug Residues in Food—Rockville, USA.
Cost: £2,365·28;

21-26 June 1992
VIth International Technical Consultation on Veterinary Drug Registration—Buenos Aires, Argentina.
Cost: £3,739·46.

The costs were incurred in accordance with Treasury rules for Civil Service travel and subsistence.

DEFENCE

Technical Co-operation Programme

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 21 May, Official Report, 256, when the technical co-operation programme mentioned in point (f) was set up; what was its original purpose; and which countries were involved at the beginning.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On 25 October 1957, the then President of the United States and the then Prime Minister of Great Britain made a declaration of common purpose part of which stated that:

"The arrangements which the nations of the free world have made for collective defence and mutual help are based on the recognition that the concept of national self-sufficiency is now out of date. The countries of the free world are interdependent and only in genuine partnership, by combining their resources and sharing tasks in many fields, can progress and safety be found. For our part we have agreed that our two countries will henceforth act in accordance with this principle."

Immediately afterwards, the Canadian Government declared themselves ready to join in this common effort. The resulting organisation was called the tripartite technical co-operation programme.

Chemical and Biological Warfare

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to his answer of 26 June, Official Report, columns 357-58, what is the future of the collaborative work between Canada and Britain in the field of chemical and biological warfare carried out since 1962.

(2) pursuant to his answr of 26 June, Official Report, column 359, from what source his Department obtained the sample of shellfish toxin for the study in 1982;

(3) pursuant to his answer of 29 June, Official Report, column 411, under which defence agreement the environmental testing of the S10 respirator in Australia was organised; and what other chemical and biological warfare equipment has been tested in Australia through this agreement since 1962;

(4) pursuant to his answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 936, under which specific international agreement or agreements named in the Official Report, 21 May, columns 255-56, technical and scientific information on VX nerve gas and possible binary gases was exchanged; with which countries this information was exchanged; in what form it has been exchanged; and when the first information was exchanged;

(5) pursuant to his answer of 26 June, Official Report, columns 358-59, how often the CB defence sub-group of the technical co-operation programme meets; when and where the last meeting of the sub-group was held; how many times the sub-group has met since 1967; and when each of the four countries joined the sub-group.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment DSA under its chief executive, Dr. Graham Pearson. I have asked him to arrange for replies to be given.

Letters from Dr. Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, 1 December 1992:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him pursuant to his answer of 26 June, Official Report, Columns 357-8, what is the nature of the collaborative work between Canada and Britain in the field of chemical and biological warfare carried out since 1962 (Question 9, Order Paper, 19 November 1992) has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The United Kingdom abandoned work into offensive chemical and biological weapons in the 1950s as has Canada and collaboration between the two countries since 1962 has been into the provision of effective protective measures for the members of the Armed Forces of the UK and Canada against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them.

3. In both countries, the approach to the provision of such protective measures is made up of:

a. assessments of the hazard which involve evaluation of the potential agents that may be used against our Armed Forces and provide information on the sensitivity levels required for detection and protection,

b. techniques for detection, identification, monitoring and warning,

c. physical protection including respirators, individual protective ensembles and suits as well as collective protection,

d. decontamination of persistent agents to reduce the hazard and,

e. medical countermeasures to enhance the ability of the body to survive should exposure to chemical or biological warfare agents occur.

4. Such collaboration is carried out under the various collaborative arrangements detailed in the answer of 21 May 1992, Official Report, Columns 255-256. These involves meetings, visits to the respective Establishments and Headquarters involved and the exchange of information, personnel and equipment. The benefits from such collaboration include the sharing of limited resources and thus better value for money as well as the achievement of more robust conclusions as a result of peer review by our counterparts in Canada.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him pursuant to his answer of 26 June, Official Report, column 359 from what source his Department obtained the sample of shellfish toxin for the study in 1982 (Question 4, Order Paper, 19 November 1992) has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. In my previous letter of 10 August 1992 to you I said that > "The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protection measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work, it is necessary to investigate the effectiveness of protective measures against the range of potential agents. As stated by the Minister of State for the Armed Forces, Mr. Archie Hamilton, MP, in his answer of 26 June 1992, Official Report, column 359, a study on shellfish toxins was carried out in 1982 to establish whether such toxins have any effect on medical countermeasures against nerve agents.

> This work into the evaluation of the effectiveness of protective measures against the range of potential chemical and biological warfare agents forms part of the United Kingdom chemical and biological defence programme on which information is exchanged with the United States Department of Defence under the international agreements referred to by the Minister of State for the Armed Forces, the Rt. Hon. Archie Hamilton, MP in his answer of 21 May 1992, Official Report, columns 255-256. In this instance, the study was carried out using material supplied by the US Army Chemical Research, Development and Engineering Centre at Edgewood, Maryland."

3. The sample of shellfish toxin was therefore provided by the US Army Chemical Research and Development and Engineering Centre at Edgewood, Maryland which has from 1 October 1992 been renamed as the US Army Chemical and Biological Defense Agency located at the Edgewood Research, Development and Engineering Centre.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him pursuant to his answer of 29 June, Official Report, Column 411, under which Defence agreement the environmental testing of the S10 respirator in Australia was organised; and what other chemical and biological warfare equipment has been tested in Australia through this agreement since 1962 (Question 5, Order Paper, 19 November 1992) has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The environmental testing of the S10 respirator was carried out at the Joint Tropical Trials Research Establishment (JTTRE) under a Memorandum of Agreement between the UK and Australia relating to a joint programme of research, investigation and material testing at the JTTRE which was an outstation of the Materials Research Laboratory (MRL) of the Australia Department of Defence and is now designated as MRL-Queensland.

3. Some carbon-impregnated overgarmets were tested in the late 1960s and early 1970s in an indoor storage trial at the Joint Tropical Research Unit (JTRU) under an earlier UK/Australian Memorandum of Understanding which set up JTRU in 1962. The JTRU was subsequently incorporated into the JTTRE.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him pursuant to his answer of 16 July, Official Report, Column 936, under which specific international agreement or agreements named in the official report, 21 May, Columns 255-6, technical and scientific information and VX nerve gas and possible binary gases was exchanged; with which countries this information was exchanged; in what form it has been exchanged; and when the first information was exchanged (Question 8, Order Paper, 19 November 1992) has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. VX nerve gas was synthesised in the early 1950s and information was first exchanged in the early 1950s between the UK, US and Canada under the Tripartite Cooperation Programme which involved the United Kingdom, United States and Canada and subsequently became the Technical Cooperation Programme referred to in the Official Report, 21 May, Columns 255-6. The form of the information was in oral presentations and papers presented at the cooperation meetings, the exchange of reports and through the exchange of information on a more informal basis between individual scientists and during exchange postings arranged under the auspices of this collaborative arrangement. In the 1970s, the chemical, physical and general physiological properties of VX became unclassified. Patents on VX were also unclassified.

3. Insofar as possible binary gases are concerned, this has been the subject of much less exchange as the binary concept was developed by the United States in the 1970s and 1980s at a time when the UK no longer had an interest in retaliatory capabilities. Such information as has been exchanged of relevance to assessment of the potential hazard from binary gases has been largely under the UK/US/Canada MOU on Chemical and Biological Defence and the Technical Cooperation Programme.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him pursuant to his answer of 26 June, Official Report, Columns 358-9, how often the CB Defence sub-group of The Technical Co-operation Programme meets; when and where the last meeting of the sub-group was held; how many times the sub-group has met since 1967; and when each of the four countries joined the sub-group (Question 6, Order Paper, 30 November 1992) has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The Sub Group E on chemical and biological defence has met 15 times during the period 1967-1992 and the last meeting was held in the UK at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment in June 1992. The frequency of meetings is about once every 12 to 18 months and is as often as necessary to meet the objectives of the sub-group to promote collaboration in chemical and biological defence research. The UK, US, Canada and Australia were founder members of the sub-group when it was activated in 1967.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many memoranda of understanding have been agreed in the field of chemical and biological warfare involving Britain and the United States of America since 1963; what was the subject and nature of each memorandum of understanding; and in which year each memorandum was signed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom abandoned all offensive chemical and biological weapons in the late 1950s, since when the United Kingdom has been solely concerned with the provision of effective protective measures for the United Kingdom armed forces. It therefore follows that no memoranda of understanding on chemical and biological warfare have been agreed since 1963.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 21 May at column 255 for details of general defence agreements between the United Kingdom and the United States of America in the field of chemical and biological defence.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contingency plans his Department established in association with the United States of America following the United Kingdom's decision to abandon offensive work in the field of chemical and biological warfare.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave him on 21 May at columns 255-6 and on 26 June at column 358.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has concerning the use of chemical or biological weapons in the former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is no clear evidence to suggest that any of the republics of former Yugoslavia possesses chemical or biological weapons, although the Yugoslav Army does have quantities of tear gas.

Toxicological Warfare

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when and where the 15th tripartite conference on toxicological warfare was held; which countries participated; what were the conclusions and recommendations of the conference; and under which defence agreement the conference was organised.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The 15th tripartite conference on toxicological warfare was held in the United Kingdom in 1960. The participant countries were the United Kingdom, the United States of America and Canada, and the conclusions and recommendations of the conference have not been published. The conference was organised under an informal 1947 agreement to discuss like programmes of a chemical, biological and radiological nature.

CR Gas

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 936, what are the main points of the draft text of the chemical weapons convention which relate to CR gas; and what implications it would have for the United Kingdom stock of CR gas.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The main points of the draft chemical weapons convention which relate to CR gas are:

Article I, paragraph 5	Use of Riot Control Agents
Article II, paragraph 7	Definition of Riot Control Agents
Article II, paragraph 9d	Purposes not prohibited under the Convention
Article III, paragraph 1e	Declaration of Riot Control Agents required under the Chemical Weapons Convention
Annex 2, Appendix 1, Part XI	Allegations of use of Riot Control Agents

The chemical weapons convention has no implications for the United Kingdom stocks of CR gas.

RAF Regiment

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present strength of the Royal Air Force Regiment; and if he will make a statement on the role of this branch in the defence and security of RAF establishments and the maintenance of military skills in this service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The RAF Regiment is undergoing force reductions from just over 3,000 regular personnel in 1991 to about 2,400 personnel in 1995, a reduction of over 20 per cent. It is responsible for the defence of RAF airfields and installations at home and overseas against ground and low-level air attacks; for counter-terrorist measures; for measures to mitigate the effects of nuclear, biological, chemical and conventional weapons; for the training of all RAF personnel in ground defence skills, and counter-terrorist guarding duties at stations in the United Kingdom and overseas. The RAF Regiment's volunteer reserve programme has led to the formation of eight auxiliary-manned squadrons for the ground and low-level air defence of stations and installations in the United Kingdom.

Regular units of the RAF Regiment continue to perform operational duties in Northern Ireland, Belize, Cyprus and the Falkland Islands. Officers are also currently deployed on United Nations duties in Cambodia, Kuwait, Iraq and the former Yugoslavia.

Correspondence

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average time taken by the Ministers in his Department, including himself, to answer letters from hon. Members, in each of the first three quarters of 1992, measuring the time from the receipt of the letter to the dispatch of the substantive reply.

Mr. Rifkind: The performance of my Department in meeting targets laid down for replies to letters from hon. Members will be reported in our departmental report, due to be published early next year. The figures given will relate to the period 1 December 1991 to 30 November 1992.

Running Costs

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress he has made in achieving the target of a reduction of 2·5 per cent. in his Department's running costs for the present financial year, in the first half of this financial year; and what specifically has been saved, by what means and in what areas of his responsibility.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Data for the current financial year are not yet available. In the financial year to 31 March 1992, however, the Department made efficiency improvements to a value of £234 million against a target of £192 million. The outturn in each of the Department's main management areas and by means of achievement was as follows:

Area	Target £ million	Performance £ million	+/− £ million
Navy	45·0	62·2	+17·2
Army	66·0	56·0	−10·0
Air Force	51·0	61·9	+10·9
PE	10·8	30·7	+19·9
Centre	19·1	23·1	+4·0
Total	191·9	233·9	+42·0

Means of Achievement	As percentage of Total
Organisational Changes	24
Contractorisation	5
Changes in Manpower Mix	6
Rationalisation	14
Relocation to lower cost areas	1
Utilities and Energy	1
ADP and IT	1
Asset Management	18
Design/Engineering	1
Purchase Improvements	3
Capacity Management	25
Entrepreneurial Activity	1

This related not only to running costs but to Defence expenditure generally, apart from pensions and capital equipment.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the United Kingdom troops in Bosnia have clothing to protect them from the consequences of chemical and biological weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All United Kingdom troops deployed in Bosnia have NBC respirators and protective suits, which give protection against normal chemical weapon agents. They also have detection equipment and wind indicators.

Yugoslavia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consulation is undertaken by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and UNPROFOR prior to the departure of each convoy in the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Prior consultation about individual convoys is conducted between Bosnia-Herzegovina command and UNHCR officials at Kiselink. Instructions about convoy tasks and delivery points are passed to UNHCR warehouses and to the national contingents. This is supplemented by constant liaison at working level.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action is being taken by UNPROFOR in the former Yugoslavia to protect the chemical plant near Tuzla; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: UNPROFOR is deployed in Bosnia-Herzegovina under the terms of United Nations Security Council resolutions 770 and 776 for the purpose of escorting humanitarian convoys. The mandate does not include the protection of any part of the local infrastructure or facilities, such as the industrial chemical plant at Tuzla.

Iraq and Iran

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effect of British defence equipment exports on (a) Iraqi and (b) Iranian military capabilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The Ministry of Defence studies Iraqi and Iranian military capabilities and their military procurement activities. Apart from case by case assessments of individual export licence applications, no specific studies have been undertaken on the effect of United Kingdom defence equipment exports on the Iraqi and Iranian military capabilities.

Gulf Trust

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution has been made to the Gulf Trust from the polo day at Windsor in July 1991; what representations his Department has made on the matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The event did not generate any income for the Gulf Trust.

Historic Military Buildings Committee

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the membership, responsibilities and achievements of the Historic Military Buildings Committee since its inception.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Historic Military Buildings Committee was formed in October 1987 and comprises members who are experts in their fields from both the private and public sectors. It is an advisory group and its terms of reference are

"To consider issues concerning the upkeep of historic buildings on the Defence Estate; to consider the future of historic buildings on the Defence Estate for which there is no current defence use; and to advise on ways in which they might be preserved, either through a new defence use or through disposal in a manner sympathetic to their character".

The committee has provided advice on a number of individual sites as well as advising on more general issues such as maintenance of historic buildings. Current membership is:

Viscount Cranborne—Under Secretary of State for Defence.
Professor W. Whitfield—Architect, William Whitfield and Partners and Commissioner, Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission.
Mr. S. A. Lipton—Chief Executive, Stanhope Properties Plc.
Dr. J. R. B. Taylor—Architect and Research Consultant.
Head of London Region, English Heritage.
Head of Heritage Division, Department of the Environment.
Director General of Design Services and Adviser on Architectural Matters, Department of the Environment.
Head of Infrastructure and Logistics (Infrastructure), Ministry of Defence.
Head of Defence Lands Service, Ministry of Defence.

Additional representatives from within the Ministry of Defence attend as required.

Historic Buildings

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which organisations are responsible for advising his Department on the care of historic buildings and ancient monuments in the ownership of his Department; and what role is played by the statutory bodies with general responsibilities in this area in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The organisations which advise the Ministry of Defence on the care of historic buildings are:

(a) The Department of National Heritage;

(b) The Department of Environment (Conservation Unit);

(c) English Heritage;

(d) Historic Scotland;

(e) Cadw;

(f) Department of Environment for Northern Ireland.

The Department obtains advice and clearance from the relevant bodies when it intends to either demolish, alter or extend an historic building.

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to ensure that historic buildings and ancient monuments in his Department's ownership or care are maintained and protected to the same standards as if they were in private ownership.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department is fully aware of the important responsibilities which come with the ownership of historic buildings on the defence estate and aims for the highest standards of conservation.

British Legion Centre, Tidworth

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to provide financial support for the British Legion training centre at Tidworth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department has no such proposals. The Royal British Legion has however, been successful in securing a grant from the European Community PERIFRA programme towards the cost of building the centre.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 13 November, Official Report, columns 1005-6, how much revenue his Department hopes to raise from (a) the sale of 97 housing properties at Finningley and (b) the transfer of the additional 119 housing properties at Finningley to a housing association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The method of sale for the 97 housing properties at Finningley has yet to be decided and it would be inappropriate to disclose a figure which could prejudice any negotiations or tender action. The price for the sale of the 119 housing properties at Finningley has been recommended by the district valuer, but it remains commercial in confidence.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the use of United Kingdom technology in the Iraqi centrifuge uranium enrichment plant at Al-Farat.

Mr. Aitken [holding answer 25 November 1992]: As indicated in the IAEA reports which are available in the House of Commons Library, the Al-Farat sites intended use was as a centrifuge machine manufacturing plant. It was still under construction at the start of the Gulf War. No United Kingdom manufacturing equipment has been found at the facility.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the role of the Taji and Hutteen factories in Iraq prior to 15 January 1991.

Mr. Aitken [holding answer 25 November 1992]: From United Nations inspection reports, we now know that Taji was a military installation serving armaments production as well as missile storage, support and modification. Al Hutteen was an ammunition plant producing and testing a variety of armaments including artillery rockets and shells.

Space Research Corporation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on all meetings held between Ministers and officials of his Department and the Space Research Corporation since 1985.

Mr. Aitken [holding answer 25 November 1992]: I am not aware of any such meetings.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Information Technology

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 30 October, Official Report, columns 922-23, what has been the cost to the Exchequer of the Information Technology Services Agency's visits to the United States Social Security Administration during the last 12 months; and what was the purpose of the visits.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the administration of the Information Technology Services Agency is a matter for the chief Executive, Mr. F. J. Kenworthy. He will reply to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from F. J. Kenworthy to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 1 December 1992.

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to the Parliamentary Question tabled by you on 24 November 1992, concerning my fact finding visit to the United States Social Security Administration. As Chief Executive of the Information Technology Services Agency I have responsibility for the Agencys travel expenditure.

The visit referred to in the Secretary of States answer of the 30th of October, Official Report, columns 922-3, took place in July 1992. The main purpose of the visit was to attend a meeting of the 5 Countries IT sub-committee which took place in Ottawa, Canada. This is a group comprised of representatives from the Information Technology Divisions of the Social Security Departments of the USA, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and the UK. The purpose of setting up the 5 countries meetings was to create a forum which is conducive to the sharing of knowledge and pooling of experience. The sub-committee meets a little less than once a year.

Whilst in North America, I took the opportunity to visit the offices of the United States Social Security Administration in Baltimore to look at some of the technical advances that they have made in their utilisation of Information Technology. I was particularly interested in their use of kiosk technology and optical imaging and was keen to look at the improvements in service that this type of technology could offer to the public.

Also during my visit to the US SSA I met with the Deputy Commissioner of Systems, Mr. DiPentima, to discuss the possibility of an exchange of technical staff between our two organisations. ITSA has already been involved in a number of exchanges with the other members of the 5 Countries and these have proved extremely worthwhile; resulting in a sharing of expertise which could otherwise only have been gained through the employment of consultants at a considerable greater cost.

The total cost of my visit to Canada and America was £5,341.03.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for the future of the independent living fund.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier) on 24 November at column 597.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements have now been made to replace the independent living fund in Nottingham after March 1993; and if he will state whether (a) the replacement for the ILF will continue to be based in Nottingham, (b) curent levels of staffing and finance will be maintained and (c) existing staff in the ILF will be transferred to the replacement unit.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Canterbury on 24 November (Mr. Brazier) at column 597.

Details of the administrative arrangements for the two bodies will be announced in due course.

Child Support Act 1991

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to ensure that a woman will not be compelled to claim maintenance from her child's father (a) before the implementation of the Child Support Act 1991 and (b) afterwards.

Mr. Burt: There is currently no requirement for a mother to co-operate with the Department of Social Security in seeking maintenance from the father of her child, though the great majority do so willingly. From April 1993, parents with care who are getting income support, family credit or disability working allowance will be required to co-operate with the Child Support Agency in seeking maintenance, unless the agency is satisfied that compliance would risk causing harm or undue distress to the parent with care or to any child living with her.

Agencies

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to amend targets set for his next steps agencies for 1992.

Miss Widdecombe: By a combination of increasing expertise and improved efficiency, the Contributions Agency is having increasing success in identifying the previously unregistered self employed. Accordingly my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has raised the agency's 1992-93 target to identify those with class 2 liability from 40,000 to 70,000 persons. This will be a more challenging target for the agency's staff to meet.

War Pensions

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations his Department has received from the national chairman of the Royal British Legion concerning his announcement on 12 November on the uprating of war pensions and allowances; what reply is being sent; what action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: A letter on the subject has been received from the national chairman of the Royal British Legion. A reply has been sent advising that the views expressed in that letter, and the views of others representing the interests of ex-servicemen and women, will be discussed at the meeting of the Central Advisory Committee on War Pensions on 3 December.

Correspondence

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average time taken by the Ministers in his Department, including himself, to answer letters from hon. Members, in each of the first three quarters of 1992, measuring the time from the receipt of the letter to the dispatch of the substantive reply.

Miss Widdecombe: This information is in the table:

Quarter	Number of letters	Average working days taken
1 January 1992-31 March 1992	4,464	19·0
1 April 1992-30 June 1992	2,284	18·5
1 July 1992-30 September 1992	3,169	21·0

Running Costs

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress he has made in achieving the target of a reduction of 1·5 per cent. in his Department's running costs for the present financial year, in the first half of this financial year; and what specifically has been saved, by what means and in what areas of his responsibility.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department is well on the way to achieving its target of 1·5 per cent. efficiency savings in 1992-93. Approximately £66 million has already been achieved to meet the cash target of £78 million and we expect to exceed that by around £20 million by the end of the year.

The main achievement in efficiency measures to date include, within the Benefits Agency, staff savings from computerisation of IS and pensions. Better education for the Contributions Agency's customers has led to greater efficacy in NIC collection whilst further savings have been made in the transfer of work from IT consultants to civil servants and contractors.

Families

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the cost of the survey on families with children being carried out on behalf of his Department by the Policy Studies Institute;

(2) what is the purpose of the survey of families with children being carried out for his Department by the Policy Studies Institute; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The survey of families with children is being carried out for the Department as part of a programme of studies by the Policy Studies Institute. The programme looks at the role of family credit for a range of different families, and will provide better information than is presently available on movements in and out of low income.

The cost of the survey is £20,000.

Child Support Act

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the numbers of parents with care who will incur the 78-week benefit penalty under the Child Support Act 1991.

Mr. Burt: It is not possible to estimate this number within acceptable levels of accuracy. However, it is anticipated that in all but a tiny minority of cases of parents with care on benefit will either voluntarily co-operate with the Child Support Agency or will not be required to co-operate because there would be a risk of harm or undue distress to her or her children, were she to do so.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the numbers of families divided into lone parents and couples, who will be lifted off income support as a result of receiving child support maintenance under the Child Support Act 1991 in the first year of implementation and the following three years.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox) on Thursday, 26 November at column 803.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages Councils

8. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations she has received against her proposal to abolish the wages councils.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Since 5 November, I have received a number of representations for and against the proposal. Some 94 per cent. of representations from employers support abolition of the wages councils.

18. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the impact on incomes following the abolition of wages councils.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The abolition of wages councils will free up the labour market, increase job opportunities and improve the prospects for many individuals to increase their income.

26. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees have conditions of work and remuneration covered by wages councils; and what percentage of these employees are women.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is estimated that the wages councils set minimum pay and overtime rates which cover some 2,561,000 workers, aged 21 or over, about two thirds of whom are women.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 332, if she will estimate (a) the number of wages councils employers in 1988, (b) the number of them who responded directly with support for abolition and (c) the ratio of (b) to (a).

Mr. McLoughlin: It is estimated that some 250,000 employers were covered by wages councils in 1988. The 1988 consultation document, resulted in 36 individual employers and 37 employers' organisations writing in support of abolition. It is not possible to estimate the ratio of all employers covered by the councils which these letters represent.

Labour Statistics

15. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of Britain's work force is currently unemployed; and what percentage of the European Community's work force is currently unemployed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest available and most up to date figures are published by the OECD. These show an unemployment rate for the United Kingdom of 10·2 per cent. for October 1992 compared with an EC average, excluding Denmark, Greece and Luxembourg, of 9·4 per cent. for September 1992.

16. Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many redundancies there have been in the west midlands in the last three months.

Mr. McLoughlin: The latest available figures from the quarterly labour force survey show that 32,000 people were made redundant in the west midlands in the three months prior to the spring 1992 survey.

19. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what the change has been in the numbers unemployed for a year or longer since 1 December 1991.

Mr. McLoughlin: Claimant unemployment figures by duration are available on a quarterly basis and are not adjusted for seasonal influences. Between January 1992 and October 1992 the number of claimants unemployed for more than one year rose by 208,635.

20. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of unemployed people in the United Kingdom, using the same counting base as in May 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin: No such figures are available from the Department. Attempting to estimate how many people would now be registered as unemployed at jobcentres and careers offices if voluntary registration had not been introduced in October 1982 would involve speculation about economic, demographic and other factors.

25. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest unemployment figures; and what the figures were in May 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin: On the consistent, seasonally adjusted basis, there were 2,867,600 claimant unemployed people in the United Kingdom in October 1992 compared with 1,087,000 in May 1979.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people in the Carlisle travel-to-work area are not in employment, not on a youth training scheme and not in full-time education.

Mr. McLoughlin: In October 1992 there were 1,143 unemployed claimants aged under 25 in the Carlisle travel-to-work area.

Job Clubs

21. Mr. Broadbent: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the performance indicators used in the evaluation of job clubs.

Mr. McLoughlin: The overall indicator for job clubs is the degree to which they improve unemployed people's chances of finding work. Our most recent survey (1989), found that attending a job club increased an individual's chance of finding a full-time job by about 50 per cent. Information is also collected monthly to measure the performance of individual job clubs. This includes the number of entrants to the programme and the number of job placings. Information on costs is collected quarterly.

Pay Levels

22. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she last met representatives of the Low Pay Unit to discuss average pay levels in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There has been no meeting with the Low Pay Unit.

TECs

23. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the contribution of the training and enterprise councils covering Surrey in helping those out of work.

Mr. McLoughlin: Surrey TEC has developed a range of innovative approaches to help people get back into work. This is true of TECs up and down the country.

24. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures she is taking to meet the concerns which have been expressed by TECs.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply given earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Milligan).

Careers Service

27. Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations she has received regarding the future of the careers service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Following public consultations on the future of the careers service in spring 1991, my right hon. Friend has received representations from local education authorities, training and enterprise councils, the Institute for Careers Guidance, local authority associations and others.

Coal Industry (Health and Safety)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made of the reasons for the increase in the death and injury rate in the coal mining industry for the years 1987-88 and 1989-90.

Mr. McLoughlin: Any increase in accident rates is of concern, but it is not appropriate to compare two years in isolation. A relatively small change in the number of accidents can disproportionately effect accident rates.

The British Coal "all accident rate" for 1990-91 of 29·34 per 100,000 manshifts is the lowest ever recorded and this is the clearest indication of the continuing progress in reducing accidents achieved by British Coal in co-operation with the workforce, worker's representatives and the Health and Safety Executive's mines inspectorate.

Pesticides

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 337, when she expects the review of the pesticides incident appraisal panel to be complete; and if she will publish its findings.

Mr. McLoughlin: The review by the Health and Safety Executive of the pesticide incidents appraisal panel is now underway. Details of the findings will be made publicly available, and an interim statement of progress is anticipated by the end of June 1993.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 336, if she will give the procedural changes undertaken by the Health and Safety Executive in its dealings with the public.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Executive has introduced the following procedural changes relating to its dealings with members of the public:

guidance on the procedure for dealing with complaints has been revised and re-issued to all staff in the Health and Safety Executive's (HSE) Field Operations Division (FOD);

new instructions have been issued to all professional staff in FOD on responsible and considerate relations with private individuals; and arrangements have been made to improve the internal organisations of HSE area offices to provide nominated public inquiry officers and duty inspectors.

HSE has also issued two booklets which tell both the general public and the employer about the HSE and about the way its staff go about their work. They explain what the public can expect from HSE and what to do if they are not happy with the way they have been dealt with.

Passenger Congestion

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals her Department has to encourage employers to stagger the work hours of employees as a means of alleviating passenger congestion.

Mr. McLoughlin: None. It is for employers and employees to agree between themselves what patterns of work best suit their needs.

Youth Training

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by reference to what costs to the trainee the youth training allowance is calculated; and when it was last increased.

Mr. McLoughlin: The minimum weekly allowances paid to young people on youth training are £29·50 for 16-year-olds and £35 for those who are 17 or older. The minimum allowance for 16-year-olds was last increased in July 1988; the £35 was set in April 1986.

Many trainees receive more than these minimum allowances because employers are encouraged to supplement payments to trainees. It is in their interests to do this because it helps them to recruit and retain trainees in whom they are investing quality training.

A young person who is living at home with their parents should find the allowance adequate for their needs. Young people who find the allowance to be insufficient may be able to obtain additional support by making a claim for income support.

Training

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what funds will be made available for further employment training schemes in areas affected by coal mine closures; and if she will make a statement concerning allocations to Seaham and Easington.

Mr. McLoughlin: A total of £75 million will be made available for additional labour market measures to alleviate the effects of the colliery closures. Final details of the action plan for County Durham training and enterprise council for the Seaham—Vane Tempest—colliery and Easington areas, including the proportion of the £75 million available, have yet to be agreed and will depend on the closures going ahead.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list all the Government and Government-financed agencies which have provided employment, skills training, or other courses, to job seekers in the Seaham and Peterlee areas during the past five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: County Durham training and enterprise council and formerly the Employment Department's Durham area office have provided training programmes in Seaham and Peterlee areas through a wide range of organisations during the past five years. These are listed. The list also includes other Government Departments and Government supported organisations which have been active in Employment creation and enterprise support in these areas.

1. Training providers in Seaham/Peterlee in last five years
   - Northern Training Trust
   - Peterlee College
   - Key Colleges
   - Easington District Council
   - Council for Voluntary Services
   - Easington Unemployment Committee
   - Seaham and District Adult Training Trust
   - Seaham Action

2. Training providers based outside Peterlee/Seaham but Operating in these areas
   - LINK
   - AC Training
   - Action Training
   - ASTRA Training
   - Sedgefield District Council

3. Other Employment Departments/Government supported organisations
   - Department of Trade and Industry
   - Employment Department
   - Employment Service
   - County Durham Training and Enterprise Council
   - The Northern Development Company
   - East Durham Development Agency
   - East Durham Task Force
   - British Coal Enterprise Ltd
   - English Estates North

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations she has received from organisations within the Easington constituency to increase and improve employment training schemes.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand that several recent representations relating to employment training provision have been made by Easington organisations to the County Durham training and enterprise council.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) informations were laid and

(b) convictions were obtained under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 in the coal mining industry in each of the last five years; and what was the average fine.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Informations laid	Convictions
1987	9	3
1988	3	2
1989	51	6

The average fine for the convictions was £1,543.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will implement a refrigerant recycling and reclaim policy covering all departmental equipment currently using chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbons; if she will publish targets for departmental reuse and recycling; if she will implement an equipment conversion and replacement programme for all departmental uses of CFCs and HCFCs; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is part of the Department's environmental policy to eliminate where possible the use of toxic or ozone-depleting chemicals. This is being achieved by replacing equipment which uses such substances with alternatives which do not contain ozone-depleting chemicals, as and when they are due for replacement. The use by the Department of ozone-depleting chemicals is minimal but we pay due regard to proper disposal methods and are taking steps to ensure that all staff are aware of them.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will introduce a leakage prevention programme for all refrigeration and air conditioning equipment owned and operated by her Department; if she will publish targets for reductions in leakages; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Where such systems are a part of properties occupied by the Department they are regularly checked as a part of planned maintenance.

Women

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures the Government are taking to improve training and promotion prospects for women.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government are committed to the improvement of training and promotion prospects for everyone in the labour market. It has welcomed the national education and training targets and the emphasis they place on acquiring skills.

The introduction of the training and enterprise councils (TECs) has meant a training environment which is flexible and geared towards the achievement of vocational qualifications for everyone. The work that has been done on the accreditation of prior learning is particularly helpful to women who are less likely to have achieved vocational qualifications in their working lives.

Labour market returners, the majority of whom are women, have and will continue to have special access arrangements within adult training programmes run by TECs. The programmes also provide flexible training that allows women to reconcile their domestic commitments with their training.

The Government take every opportunity to encourage employers to make the best use of their resources. This includes supporting the employer-led Opportunity 2000 campaign. We promote the development of people in work through the investors in people initiative, which applies to all people. In addition this year, we have introduced a new national training award that recognises training and development of specific benefit to women.

In the new year, my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, intends to launch a series of regional 'opportunity shops' to promote women's participation in the world of work and beyond.

European Community Social Affairs Council

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what matters will be discussed at the next EC Social Affairs Council; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: At the meeting of the Social Affairs Council on 3 December, among the main items to be considered are the United Kingdom presidency initiatives concerning employment growth; effective implementation and enforcement of Community legislation; vocational qualifications; and the portability of occupational pensions.

A number of other important matters will be on the agenda, including Community instruments on:

free movement of workers;
the posting of sub-contracted workers in the Community;
health and safety in mines and quarries;
the proposed European Health and Safety Agency; action for the disabled.

This agenda will take forward the aim of the United Kingdom presidency of making sensible progress on the business of the Community and of securing a positive social dimension that brings real benefits to the citizens of the Community.

The Council will also discuss the current state of play on the working time directive.

Health and Safety Research

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money was received from the European Commission in respect of health and safety research undertaken for the Commission by the Health and Safety Executive; who was the recipient of that money in each year since 1990-91; and what is the corresponding information for the current year.

Mr. McLoughlin: Money received from the European Commission in each year for research related projects was:

1990-91	50
1991-92	176
1992-93	100

These receipts were retained by the Health and Safety Executive.

Agricultural Inspectors

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the number of agricultural inspectors in the Health and Safety Executive area offices in Scotland in each year since 1978.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of agricultural inspectors employed in Scotland in each year since 1978 was:

	Number

1981	17

Note: Figures are for 1 April each year and show full-time equivalent staff.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the money allocated to the Health and Safety Executive following the transfer of the offshore safety division was spent in 1991-92; and what proportion of it has been spent in 1992-93.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information is not available in the precise form requested. However HSC/E's direct expenditure on its offshore safety division in 1991-92 was £11·5 million; the forecast for 1992-93 is currently £19·9 million.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the number of factory inspectors in the Health and Safety Executive area offices in Scotland in each year since 1978.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of factory inspectors employed in Scotland in each year since 1978 was:

1980	67
1981	64
1982	63

1992	62·5

Note:
Figures are for 1 April each year and show full-time equivalent staff.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the contribution for the Health and Safety Executive to the European Commission in relation to European health and safety directives and standards for each year since 1990-91; and what is the contribution for the current year.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available in the form requested.

The HSE plays a very active part in the development and negotiation of all health and safety directives and standards at European level.

Employment Prospects

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations she has received about the effect of the autumn statement on future employment prospects.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State has not, as yet, received any representations about the effect of the autumn statement on employment prospects. However it is our belief that the series of measures proposed in the autumn statement aimed at rebuilding confidence, helping industry and strengthening the economy will help to boost employment prospects.

Employment Action

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the implementation of the employment action programme.

Mr. McLoughlin: Since its introduction in 1991 employment action has played a valuable role in providing temporary work to help unemployed people maintain their existing skills. This will continue to be one of the options in the new training for work provision that will be introduced in April 1993.

Correspondence

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average time taken by the Ministers in her Department including herself, to answer letters from hon. Members, in each of the first three quarters of 1992, measuring the time from the receipt of the letter to the dispatch of the substantive reply.

Mr. McLoughlin: The average time taken to reply to hon. Members letters in the first three-quarters of 1992 was as follows: first quarter 9·28 working days; second quarter 8·57 working days; third quarter 10·4 working days.

Running Costs

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress she has made in achieving the target of a reduction of 1·5 per cent. in her Department's running costs for the present financial year, in the first half of this financial year; and what specifically has been saved, by what means and in what areas of her responsibility.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department's spending plans for 1992-93, including its proposals for achieving at least a 1·5 per cent. reduction in administrative costs through efficiency gains during 1992-93 are summarised in the departmental report (Cm 1906) published in February 1992. We hope to make efficiency gains in a number of areas including:

Improved procurement procedures;

Rationalisation of the estate;

Improved administration procedures;

Investment in and better control of telecommunications;

Implementation of Internal Audit and Management Services reviews;

Improvements in staff training;

Investment in Information Technology.

Savings will be generated over a full 12-month period and the attainment of planned targets is assessed following the end of each financial year. Specific figures on savings to date are unavailable. However, at the end of the first six months of the current financial year there is every indication that the anticipated savings will be realised.

Medical Examinations

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether she will introduce proposals to require that individuals whose application for employment is refused on the basis of a medical examination, are sent the results of such an examination and informed of the medical reason why employment has been refused.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. This is a matter for employers to decide.

Long-term Unemployment

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will visit Bradley redundancy action group to discuss the psychological and emotional effects of long-term unemployment.

Mr. McLoughlin: Employment Ministers have no plans to visit this group; but the employment service regional director will shortly be arranging for contact to be made with the group, as will Wolverhampton training and enterprise council.

Unemployment

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to increase the opportunities available to help unemployed people.

Mr. McLoughlin: On 12 November, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, announced a new framework of employment and training measures to help unemployed people back to work. The new arrangements, which will begin in April 1993, offer the widest range of help to unemployed people that we have ever provided. We expect there to be almost half a million more opportunities on our programmes in 1993-94 than in this year.

Acquired Rights Directive

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate she has made of the effects of the acquired rights directive on (a) services her Department contracts out and (b) services she plans to contract out in the future; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The possible effects of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981, which implement the acquired rights directive in the United Kingdom, have always been taken into account in any consideration of the contracting out of my Department's services.

The main functions to be market tested to September 1993 were published in the citizens charter White Paper (Cm 2101) on 25 November.

SCOTLAND

Glasgow

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will discuss with the Glasgow city liaison group the needs of those who are victims of violence.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend recognises the needs of victims of violence but has no plans to meet the Glasgow city liaison group. Government funding of some £642,000 is being provided in the current financial year for the Scottish Association of Victim Support Schemes. The association provides general assistance and counselling for all victims of crime through a network of local support schemes. There are a number of such schemes based in Glasgow.

Fact-finding Visits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 3 November, Official Report, columns 156-57, if he will list for each of his Department's agencies, and by date and venue for the last 12 months, the cost to the Exchequer of the chief executives' fact-finding visits.

Mr. Lang: The hon. Member's earlier question elicited replies from the four agencies for which I am responsible, indicating that only the chief executive of Historic Scotland had made such fact finding visits. I have therefore asked Mr. G. Munro, chief executive of Historic Scotland to reply to the hon. Member directly.

Letter from Graeme N. Munro to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 1 December 1992

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent question about the costs of 'fact-finding' visits.

My reply of 30 October sought to explain in general terms the types of visit I have undertaken in the last 12 months from which I have gained useful insights into various matters relating to my responsibilities as Director and Chief Executive of Historic Scotland. However, none of these visits was arranged specifically as a 'fact-finding' visit.

I should be very happy to provide further information on any particular area of our work of interest to you.

Forest Policy

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to develop an integrated forest policy for Britain, ensuring that all aspects of deforestation at home and abroad are taken into account; and what mechanism exists to ensure that each Government Department adopts a coherent and complementary approach to forestry and deforestation issues.

Sir Hector Monro: I refer the hon. Member to the answer the Prime Minister gave the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 3 November at column 133.

Correspondence

Mr. Spreat: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average time taken by the Ministers in his Department, including himself, to answer letters from hon. Members, in each of the first three quarters of 1992, measuring the time from the receipt of the letter to the dispatch of the substantive reply.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Office has a target of issuing replies to letters from hon. Members within 17 days of their receipt. My Department's performance in meeting this target during 1992 will be published in the Official Report in due course, and be made available to the House Libraries.

Running Costs

Mr. Spreat: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress he has made in achieving the target of a reduction of 1·5 per cent. in his Department's running costs for the present financial year, in the first half of this financial year; and what specifically has been saved, by what means and in what areas of his responsibility.

Mr. Lang: The overall level of running costs for my Department is agreed with Treasury each year on the basis that efficiency gains of 1·5 per cent. must be delivered. Departments must then ensure they operate within the overall running cost limit set, and my Department are on target to do so in 1992-93.

Delivery of specific savings and improvements in efficiency is the responsibility of managers throughout each of my Departments working within designated budgets and performance targets which reflect the need to produce efficiency gains through increased output and reduction in costs. In identifying opportunities for savings, managers can call on support and expert advice from specialists in areas such as organisation of work and purchasing. Internal management plans define prospective savings and check on the delivery of what was planned for the previous year. The specific details requested are not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Higher Education

Dr. Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of the Higher Education Funding Council for Scotland's budget is expected to be spent on supporting research activities in 1992-93; and what are the planned totals for 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Higher Education Funding Council will not begin distributing funds to higher education institutions until 1 April 1993. It therefore has no budget to support research activities in 1992-93. Decisions on the level of support for research in future years will be made after my right hon. Friend has announced in the near future his decisions on expenditure on higher education from 1993-94 onwards and in the light of the council's assessment of the needs of the higher education sector in Scotland.

Forestry Commission Land

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the name, location and Ordnance Survey map reference and (b) the area in hectares of each piece of Forestry Commission land in North Yorkshire; and which of these are currently for sale.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 16 November 1992]: On 31 March 1992, the Forestry Commission managed 23,200 hectares of land in north Yorkshire, of which 20,300 hectares were woodland. The detailed information about each piece of land is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The woodlands which are currently for sale on the open market are listed; the sales of a further seven woodlands are currently being negotiated.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the name, location and Ordnance Survey map reference, (b) the area in hectares, (c) the price obtained, (d) the name and address of the purchaser and (e) the date of sale for each piece of Forestry Commission land sold in the county of North Yorkshire since 1 January 1988.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 16 November 1992]: The areas of forest land sold between 1 January 1988 and 30 September 1992 are listed; details of sales of land other than forest land, and the grid references of forest land, are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The Forestry Commission sought the purchaser's permission in each case to disclose the price paid and the name (but not the address) of the purchaser. Where such permission was given, the information is provided.

Community Care

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of local authority social work authorities to discuss the implementation of care in the community legislation in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 November 1992]: The secretary of State has no plans but Lord Fraser of Carmyllie met representatives of the COSLA social work committee on 2 October and the Association of Directors of Social Work on 20 November for discussions on community care matters. Further meetings will be arranged as the need arises.

Land and Buildings

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the present capital values of land and buildings at (a) Stracather hospital, (b) Arbroath infirmary and (c) Tayside health board.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 26 November 1992]: The information requested is shown as at 1 April 1992.

Recycling

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to encourage the newspaper and textile industries to promote and participate in recycling schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 November 1992]: The Government encourage recycling wherever it makes commercial and environmental sense, and have set the target of recycling 50 per cent. of the recyclable fraction of domestic waste by the year 2000. Paper accounts for approximately 33 per cent. of the domestic waste stream and textiles for around 5 per cent; high recycling rates for both materials will make a significant contribution towards achieving the target. In 1991, following discussions with the Government, the Newspaper Publishers Association agreed to aim to increase the proportion of waste paper used in newsprint consumed in the United Kingdom to at least 40 per cent. by 2000. I am also aware that the textile reclamation industry has been actively pursuing with local authorities the means of increasing existing re-use and recycling rates.

Children's Hospice

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to encourage or assist the development of a Scottish children's hospice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 November 1992.] At the request of my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State, the Scottish Office Home and Health Department has been actively encouraging the various voluntary sector groups seeking to establish a children's hospice in Scotland to combine their efforts. We hope that, as a result, agreement can be reached on a co-ordinated and united approach which provides a national facility conveniently located and fully integrated with local networks of care. We believe that this initiative is primarily for the voluntary sector, but the Government will continue to monitor developments. Until more definite proposals emerge any consideration of further Government assistance would be premature.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the current numbers of staffed beds for (a) orthopaedic surgery, (b) general surgery and (c) general medicine for (i) each Scottish health board, (ii) in total for Scotland and (iii) for each hospital.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 26 November 1992]: The information requested is shown in the table.

Foreign Landowners

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the proportion of the land area of Scotland, by region, owned by foreign nationals.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 November 1992]: None. Information on land transactions is however available from the registers of Scotland Executive Agency.

Disability

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he has in place to liaise regularly with representatives of disability interests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 November 1992]: Officials have frequent contact, in meetings and more informally, with many of the voluntary sector organisations representing people with disabilities. In particular, officials sit as assessors on the executive committee of Disability Scotland and on the council of the Scottish Society for Mental Health. They also sit as observers on Disability Scotland's Access and Mobility Committee and on the Disabled Person's Transport Advisory Committee.

Police

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of serving (a) chief police officers and (b) the Scottish Police Federation to discuss community policing and combating crime; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 November 1992]: My right hon. Friend meets chief police officers and representatives of the Scottish Police Federation from time to time but has at present no plans for meetings on the lines proposed.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet the Chief Constable of Strathclyde police to discuss community policing and initiatives to combat crime; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 November 1992]: My right hon. Friend meets the chief constable of Strathclyde police from time to time, but has at present no plans for a meeting on the lines proposed.

Court Refurbishment

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when Aberdeen sheriff court will be equipped with closed circuit television and video recording equipment for use in trials;

(2) how many sheriff courts in Scotland have (a) closed circuit television and (b) video recording equipment for use in trials.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 November 1992]: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 17 November at column 377 about closed circuit television links for child witnesses. Video playback equipment is provided by the party which wishes to use video material in evidence.

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what has been the total cost of court refurbishment work in Scotland since 1990;

(2)what was the final cost for the refurbishment of Aberdeen sheriff court.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 November 1992]: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 17 November at column 377.

Licensing Laws

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has available on any correlation between crime and licensing laws; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 November 1992]: Liquor licensing statistics for 1991 were published in August this year (Scottish Office Statistical Bulletin CRJ/1992/5) following the enactment of stricter statutory controls in the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1990. Since 1 January 1991, licensing boards have been required to take account of tighter criteria for the grant of extensions of permitted hours and of any observations made on an application by the chief constable. There are indications that some boards have already reduced the numbers and/or length of regular extensions awarded in their areas. Any trends may become clearer when 1992 figures are available.

Manufacturing Output, Paisley

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the percentage change in the output of the manufacturing sector in the Paisley postcode area for each of the past 15 years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 November 1992]: Gross output data for the manufacturing sector are available for the Paisley postcode area from 1984 onwards. These are set out in the table.

	Gross output[1] £m	Per cent. change
1984	372·2	—
1985	368·8	−0·9
1986	356·3	−3·4
1987	432·1	21·3
1988	501·1	16·0
1989	513·0	2·4

Poll Tax

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish, for the last three years for which information is available, a breakdown by poll tax collecting authority showing the number of warrants taken out against poll tax payers in arrears, the total cost involved in pursuing these warrants, the number and amount involved in warrants abandoned and subsequently written off, the number and value of warrants withdrawn due to error on the part of the local authority and the number and value withdrawn due to error on the part of the sheriff officials.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 November 1992]: This information is not available centrally.

Carpet Industry

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the state of the carpet manufacturing industry in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 November 1992]: Six carpet manufacturing plants currently operate in Scotland —four of which are owned by Stoddart Sekers International plc. Scotland also has several yarn spinning and dyeing companies which supply the carpet industry. Employment in the industry in Scotland is approximately 1,600.

Community Care

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to ring-fence or earmark resources allocated under the care in the community legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 30 November 1992]: The sums announced by my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State on 2 October for implementation of our community care reforms will not be formally ring fenced but will be clearly identified in the distribution of grant-aided expenditure as resources which have been made available for local authorities to spend on community care. We expect local authorities in Scotland to spend all these resources on community care and will be monitoring the use of these resources carefully.

Industrial Policy

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the initiatives taken on industrial policy and the governance of Scotland by him during the United Kingdom's presidency of the EC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 30 November 1992]: On 12 November following the Chancellor's autumn statement, my right hon. Friend announced initiatives totalling some £340 million to boost the construction industry, to increase resources for housing and to reduce the rate burden on Scottish business.

In the course of his stock taking on constitutional issues, the Prime Minister heard a useful range of views when he visited Scotland in September. He will be announcing his conclusions in due course.

As the hon. Member will be aware, the Select Committee on Scottish Affairs has been re-established.

Forestry Commission Land

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the lands in Scotland proposed for sale by the Forestry Commission, access to which is over private land and for which agreements for continuation of access will not be concluded.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 25 November 1992]: The information is not available at present in the detail requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I shall write to the hon. Member with the information within the next two months.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General if he will introduce a leakage prevention programme for all refrigeration and air conditioning equipment owned and operated by his departments; if he will publish targets for reductions in leakages; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The premises occupied by the Law Officers' departments all form part of the estate of Property Holdings, which is part of the Department of the Environment, and is responsible for any refrigeration and air conditioning equipment incorporated in those premises.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General if he will implement a refrigerant recycling and reclaim policy covering all departmental equipment currently using chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbons; if he will publish targets for departmental reuse and recycling; if he will implement an equipment conversion and replacement programme for all departmental uses of CFCs and HCFCs; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Law Officers' departments have no current plans for introducing a refrigerant recycling and reclaim policy. However, the departments are replacing halon fire extinguishers with ozone-friendly alternatives. Consideration will be given to the phasing-out of equipment such as refrigerators using CFCs and HCFCs where practicable alternatives exist. Small items of equipment using CFCs and HCFCs, such as refrigerators, will be disposed of in an approved manner which ensures the secure recovery of the gas.

Matrix Churchill

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Attorney-General what precedents he considered in preparing his advice for Ministers to sign public interest immunity certificates in relation to the Matrix Churchill case.

The Attorney-General: I have already told the House of my legal advice on public interest immunity. The signing of the certificates falls within Lord Justice Scott's terms of reference and detailed questions about this matter are now a matter for his review.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Bereavement Training

Mr. Abbott: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what training is made available to judges and magistrates in relation to defendants who may have suffered a bereavement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No specific training is given. However, all members of the professional and lay judiciary are encouraged to be sensitive to the needs of those appearing before them.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will implement a refrigerant recycling and reclaim policy covering all departmental equipment currently using chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbons; if he will publish targets for departmental reuse and recycling; if he will implement an equipment conversion and replacement programme for all departmental uses of CFCs and HCFCs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is already departmental policy not to procure new or replacement equipment which uses CFCs, and for existing equipment which uses them to be disposed of by qualified contractors when it is replaced. It is also departmental policy to convert and replace this equipment as the opportunity arises. The Department is committed to the targets for the reduction and elimination of CFCs and HCFCs established by the Montreal protocol.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will introduce a leakage prevention programme for all refrigeration and air conditioning equipment owned and operated by his Department; if he will publish targets for reductions in leakages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The operation and planned maintenance contracts for the Department's estate provide for the routine testing, including leak detection, of refrigeration and air conditioning equipment owned and operated by the Department. Since these arrangements are intended to reduce leakage to the minimum, ultimately the target is nil.

Land Registry

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 November, Official Report, column 26, what has been the cost to the Exchequer of the chief executive of Her Majesty's Land Registry's visits to Australia and New Zealand during the last 12 months.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The hon. Member's question concerns a specific matter on which the chief executive of Her Majesty's Land Registry is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 1 December 1992:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has asked me to reply to your question concerning the cost of the Exchequer of my fact finding visit to land registries in Australia and New Zealand in October 1991.

The Land Registry is a self-financing agency that makes no call on the Exchequer. The visit, which was in response to an invitation to address the 19th Conference of Registrars of Title, was made at a total cost of £5,199.55.

Records

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment the Public Record Office has made of the contribution made by family historians and genealogists to the world of archives and records in the United Kingdom since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The hon. Member's question concerns a specific matter on which the chief executive of the Public Record Office is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive, the Keeper of Public Records, to reply direct.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 November 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Public Record Office I am answering your Parliamentary Question, since it is a matter delegated to me under the terms of the Agency's Framework Document.

My responsibilities as the Keeper of Public Records in the world of archives and records in the United Kingdom principally involve the supervision of the care and preservation of public records, as defined in the Public Records Acts and the management of the Public Record Office. The public records include those in places outside the Public Record Office appointed as places of deposit, for the most part local authority record offices. Such local places of deposit are under the management of the responsible local or other authority; and they hold many other historical records which are used by family historians and benefit greatly from their voluntary activities in cataloguing and indexing such records. The wider ambit of local record offices and other repositories means that it would not be appropriate for the Public Record Office to make an assessment of the kind which you envisage.

Family historians and genealogists have since 1979, and earlier, represented an increasingly strong element in the readership of the Public Record Office as well as other record offices. The Office has well established links with the major societies and other institutions representing interests in this field. It takes into account these interests in its approach to the selection of records. The growing interest in using the records for these purposes has been a major factor in the making of improvements to the finding aids to the records, and in the planning of reader services both at Kew and Chancery Lane, most notably in the opening of new reading rooms at Chancery Lane for the population census returns in 1990, in their expansion in 1991, and their opening on Saturdays from July 1992.

Family history interest is represented on the Advisory Council on Public Records and also among the Friends of the Public Record Office, set up in 1983, whose secretary is currently also a member of the Advisory Council. Much valuable work is being undertaken by volunteers, many of whom are family historians, under the aegis of the Friends, in indexing and listing records in the Public Record Office. The contribution made by family historians in their own right and the benefit in the field of historical research.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what arrangements he is considering to safeguard county record offices for local historians and genealogists in the event of local government reorganisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No decisions have yet been made on local government reorganisation in either England or Wales. It is, therefore, too early to be able to assess the implications of reorganisation for county record offices. In the context of the Lord Chancellor's responsibility for public records, the Lord Chancellor will in due course be considering any advice offered to him by his Advisory Council on Public Records about any implications for the provision of archive services.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the number of mortgage repossession orders in each local authority in England and Wales in each year since 1987.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information cannot be provided on the basis of local authority areas. Mortgage possession statistics are collected from county courts the catchment areas of which cannot be easily related to the boundaries of local authority areas. The number of orders for each court, county and standard economic region are published quarterly and placed in the House of Commons Library.

Fraud Cases

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to accept the recommendation of the Roskill report that complex fraud cases should be tried by a tribunal comprising a judge and two lay members.

Mr. Jack: Legislation would be required before this recommendation could be implemented. We have no current plans to introduce such legislation, but the procedures for serious fraud cases will be kept under review, taking into account any relevant conclusions or recommendations from the Royal Commission on criminal justice when it reports next year.

Jurors (Challenges)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will introduce legislation to restore the right of defendants to challenge jurors without giving reasons.

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

We have no plans to do so.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Alerce Timber (Customs Seizure)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he intends to take legal action following the Customs and Excise's seizure of a quantity of alerce timber in Oxfordshire in May; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Decisions on whether to institute legal proceedings are a matter for the Commissioners of Customs and Excise. I understand that the commissioners, on the basis of the evidence before them, do not feel that they would be justified in instituting criminal proceedings in this case.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the costs to the Treasury of mortgage interest tax relief and its year-on-year projected costs through to 1995-96, displayed at current prices; and what would be the effect on these costs of a 1 per cent. fall in interest rates.

Mr. Darrell: The cost of mortgage interest tax relief in 1992-93 is provisionally estimated to be £5·2 billion based on the conventional assumption of no further changes in interest rates. A further one percentage point fall in interest rates—if assumed to take effect from 1 January 1993—would reduce the cost to about £5·1 billion.

The cost in future years will depend on the pattern of borrowing, the eligibility of borrowers for mortgage interest tax relief, tax rates and interest rates.

Imports

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the United Kingdom percentage deficit total in trade of imports for the current and last financial year; and what percentage of this deficit derives from EEC partners.

Mr. Nelson: Information about visible trade is published regularly in the Central Statistical Office's "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics", and is also available on the Central Statistical Office database, which may be accessed by the House of Commons Library.

Manufacturing Output

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage rise in the United Kingdom's manufacturing output during 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Nelson: Indices of United Kingdom manufacturing output can be found on the CSO databank, which can be accessed by the House of Commons Library. Information is currently available for months up to September 1992.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Straw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the planned real terms increases in the following components of public expenditure for 1993-94 compared with the latest estimates for 1992-93 of (a) general Government expenditure excluding privatisation proceeds, (b) the new control total, (c) central Government expenditure, (d) central Government support for local authorities in England, (e) local authorities' self-financed expenditure in England and (f) total standard spending for local authorities in England.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 27 November 1992]: The information requested, consistent with the autumn statement, is set out in the table.

Per cent. real growth in 1993-94 on 1992-93

Public expenditure plans and projections	Estimated outturn
Central Government expenditure (excluding privatisation proceeds)	3·75
New control total	2·30
Central Government expenditure within the new control total	[1]0·40
Support for local authorities in England	[2]n/a
Local authorities' self-financed expenditure in England	[3]n/a
Local authorities' standard spending in England	[4]0·4

[1] Growth rate after adjusting for transfers and classification changes.

[2] Figures for total central Government support for local authorities in England are not available at this stage. A detailed break-down will be published in the Statistical Supplement to the Autumn Statement.

[3] Local authorities self-financed expenditure is projected on a United Kingdom basis, and no figures are available for England alone.

[4] Growth on TSS set in 1992-93, after allowing for transfers of functions.

Independent Taxation

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many new offices were built to accommodate staff handling the work flowing from the changes introduced in 1990 in relation to independent taxation for married women and the associated changes relating to bank and building society interest; where these new offices are located; what the cost of these offices was; and how many of these offices have subsequently been closed.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 30 November 1992]: Twenty-four Inland Revenue offices were set up to deal with the very substantial growth in claims for tax repayments that was expected to follow the introduction of independent taxation in 1990 and the abolition of composite rate tax on bank and building society interest in 1991. These offices are located in Barnsley; Barnstaple; Belfast (two offices); Birkenhead; Bolton; Bootle; Dundee; Falkirk; Glenrothes; Great Yarmouth; Hull; Leicester; Manchester; Middlesbrough; Nottingham (two offices); Plymouth; St. Austell; Southampton; Sunderland; Swansea; Telford; and Wrexham.

Eleven of the buildings that house these offices were purchased, for a total cost of some £55 million, with the remainder being rented. Nineteen offices are to be closed, because tax repayment claims have not been received on the scale we expected. In all but four cases, the Inland Revenue is to re-use the buildings for other work.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Health and Safety

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-on-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission what steps have been taken to implement new health and safety measures in the Palace of Westminster in respect of the provision of suitable office furniture, lighting and ventilation as well as eye tests in respect of VDU users for (a) staff employed by the Commission and (b) staff employed by hon. Members.

Mr. Beith: All possible steps are being taken to ensure that the House complies with the new health and safety measures in respect of the provision of suitable office furniture, light and ventilation in the Palace of Westminster and the parliamentary outbuildings. All office furniture being purchased for use in conjunction with VDUs in the Palace of Westminster complies with the minimum requirements set out in European Community Council directive 9/270/EEC.

An expanded occupational health service has been in place in the Palace of Westminster since September 1991, to deal with health and safety issues with particular emphasis on pending legislation including the EC directive on VDU users. The occupational health adviser is available to all staff employed by the House of Commons Commission and staff employed by right hon. and hon. Members to assess and advise on working environments, light and ventilation, the ergonomics of individual work stations and work patterns, with a view to making recommendations as appropriate. In addition, VDU eye tests are freely available to all the above staff; appointments for these should be made direct with the occupational health adviser.

Official Report (CD-ROM)

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee when the Official Report for 1991-92 will be available to hon. Members on CD-ROM.

Mr. Waller: A CD-ROM version of the Official Report for 1991-92 is expected to be available for purchase by individuals later this month and will be made accessible to hon. Members via the Library in early 1993. The question of supply through the Vote Office to those hon. Members who wish to receive it, as an alternative to the bound volumes, is under consideration.

ADMINISTRATION COMMITTEE

Early-day Motions

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what was the estimated cost to the House of printing and publishing early-day motions in (a) Session 1991-92 and (b) Session 1992-93 up to the summer adjournment.

Mr. Michael Martin: The estimated cost to the House of printing and publishing early-day motions in:(a) Session 1991-1992 is £860,000, and (b) Session 1992-1993 up to the summer adjournment is £485,000.

TRANSPORT

Passenger Rail Services

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the consultation document "The Franchising of Passenger Rail Services"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Over 100 responses have been received to the consultation document, including more than 50 expressing interest in operating passenger rail services under franchise. The replies are being considered and various points are being pursued and clarified with some of the respondents. We hope to be able to announce early next year the first services or groups of services that will be prepared for franchising.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress made by his Department on setting targets under the citizens charter.

Mr. Norris: The Department has made significant progress in establishing an effective framework of targets across its areas of responsibility. These are detailed in the recently published White Paper "The Citizen's Charter, First Report: 1992" (Cm 2101). Nationalised industries and executive agencies sponsored by the Department have published their targets in individual charters and service guides; further details can be found in the bibliography of the White Paper.

Employee Transport Schemes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to establish pump priming funds for companies wishing to establish company employee transport schemes.

Mr. Freeman: No. Transport to places of employment is a matter for the individuals and companies concerned.

A5

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action has been taken by his Department in connection with the rate assessment and scheme identification study into the A5 from Old Stratford to the M42 announced in the "Roads for Prosperity" White Paper of May 1989.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The report on the scheme identification study for the length of A5 between Old Stratford in Buckinghamshire and the M42 near Tamworth is under consideration.

Road Humps

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from (a) resident's associations, (b) local highways authorities, (c) individual members of the public and (d) bus operators on the effect of road humps on traffic in (i) the streets where they are sited and (ii) the nearest streets without road humps which provide alternative routes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No central record is kept of the number of such representations and it would not be economic to produce such figures. Road humps are installed on local roads, for which local authorities have responsibility. For this reason, the majority of the approaches I received on road humps are from local highway authorities seeking technical advice.

M1

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects contracts to be placed for the widening of the M1 from junction 1 to its junction with the M6.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Apart from the scheme for widening between junctions 9 and 10 (northbound) on which work will start next year, it is too early to predict with any certainty when contracts might be placed for the other four schemes which make up the proposed widening of the M1 between the M25 (junction 6A) and the M6 (junction 19). Preparation work is proceeding satisfactorily. The public were consulted on proposals for widening the length between the M25 and junction 10 in September and on the length between junctions 10 and 15 earlier this month. Consultations on proposals for junction 19 and for the length between junctions 15 and 19 are expected to take place around the middle of next year. We will make every effort to announce our preferred option for each scheme within as short a time as possible.

Emergency Telephones, Motorways

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to eliminate traffic noise from the emergency telephones on motorways.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is not possible totally to eliminate the effects on motorway telephones of noise generated by passing traffic. All new telephones are equipped with noise-cancelling microphones to reduce the effects of noise.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to reduce the distance between emergency telephones on motorways.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have no plans to reduce the distance between emergency telephones on motorways.

A1

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce whether the new policy on motorway service areas will apply to the A1 when it has been upgraded to motorway standard.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I hope to make an announcement before Christmas.

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many civil servants are currently employed by his Department (a) in London and (b) elsewhere.

Mr. Norris: Sixteen thousand and seventy six civil servants are currently employed by the Department, including its executive agencies; 2,594 are in inner London, 695 in the intermediate and outer London area, and 12,787 elsewhere.

Railway Viaduct, Colne

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the annual cost to British Rail of maintaining the railway viaduct at Colne, Lancashire.

Mr. Freeman: Detailed costs of the maintenance of individual structures on lines are a matter for British Rail.

Foreign Underground Systems

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies he has commissioned of foreign underground transport systems as a means of improving (a) the operational efficiency (b) the number of passengers carried by and (c) the financial outturn of London Transport.

Mr. Norris: None. London Underground Ltd. has close links with other metro systems worldwide, and draws on their experience, where appropriate, to improve its own performance.

Highway Authorities (Liaison)

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the level of liaison between highway authorities when one highway authority is proposing a road scheme that has an indirect effect on a neighbouring authority.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The level of liaison is a matter for authorities themselves to determine. In deciding whether to accept a particular scheme for transport supplementary grant support, the Secretary of State considers all aspects including the supporting information provided in the authority's transport policies and programme submission.

London Transport (Passengers Charter)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the improvements which have been made by London Transport as a result of the passengers charter provisions on (a) avoidance of delays and disruption of passengers, (b) paying of compensation to passengers whose journeys have been delayed or disrupted and (c) providing timely information to passengers about delays and disruption.

Mr. Norris: London Underground's customer charter introduced a refund scheme for customers whose journeys are delayed for 20 minutes or more for reasons within LUL's control. The number of such delays is now lower than it was when the scheme was launched in July. On information, my Department has set London Underground targets to improve by 1 April 1993 the quality of information provided on trains and at stations, so that 78 per cent. and 76 per cent. of customers respectively rate it as acceptable or better. Both these targets are now being met.

M66 (Middleton-Denton)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what future date it is proposed to start construction on the Middleton-Denton section of the M66 motorway.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I expect work at the northern end of the scheme from the River Irk to the junction of the existing M66 with the M62 motorway to start next March. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport are considering the inspector's report of the public inquiry into revised orders and compulsory purchase orders for the central and southern sections of the scheme which ended last February. Subject to that, work could start on the Tameside section south of the River Medlock in 1995 and on the final section between the River Medlock and the River Irk in 1996.

A38 (Departmental Survey)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to publish the survey of the A38 undertaken by his Department; when the survey was originally intended to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 1 December 1992]: The study into the long-term needs of the A38 between Exeter and Plymouth, which was announced in the White Paper "Roads for Prosperity", was always regarded as a longer-term project, and no date for its commencement or completion was set.

I now intend to invite fee competition bids for this study early next year.

Village Bypass Schemes

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many village bypass schemes not on primary routes have been accepted for transport supplementary grant during the most recent five years for which information is available.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 1 December 1992]: Following is the information:

Year	Number of schemes
1988-89	13
1989-90	12
1990-91	10

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what circumstances his Department could be expected favourably to consider for transport supplementary grant a village bypass scheme which is not on a designated primary route; what guidance he has issued to local highways authorities about this matter beyond the published criteria for transport supplementary grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 1 December 1992]: My Department receives annual bids for eligible schemes from the 108 English local highway authorities. They are considered on their overall merits in competition. The number accepted for TSG depends on the level of resources available.

The Department issues an annual circular explaining the operation of the TSG system. The latest edition is local authority circular 3/92. It contains details of the eligibility criteria. All roads which are of more than local importance are eligible for TSG. In addition, guidance notes on the completion of the finance forms used to support bids for TSG are issued to each local highway authority. These notes include particulars of information required to support bids for TSG on individual major schemes.

Q Registration System

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider reforms of the Q registration system for motor vehicles to prevent abuses.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Yes. The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency is currently reviewing the system for the allocation of Q registration marks in consultation with the police and other interested parties.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authorities, Lancashire

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority in Lancashire the capital receipts held by them resulting from the sale of land, property and other assets.

Mr. Robin Squire: The total usable receipts held by each local authority in Lancashire as at 31 March 1992 are shown in the table. Information disaggregated into receipts from sale of land, property and other assets is not available.

Local Government Finance

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, by local authority area in England and Wales, the value of capital receipts held by those authorities, and the annual interest attracted on those capital receipts for revenue spending.

Mr. Robin Squire: No information is held centrally on the interest attracted on usable capital receipts for each local authority. I have arranged for the latest available information on the usable capital receipts held by authorities in England at 31 March 1992 to be placed in the Library of the House. Information for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Solar Energy

Mr. Dalis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to adopt passive solar designs for all Government buildings.

Mr. Baldry: The Department of the Environment encourages all forms of energy efficiency measures in Government buildings, including that of passive solar design where appropriate. However, the application of such measures is the responsibility of individual Departments.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the settlement figure to local authorities from the financial year 1984-85 to 1991-92; and what was the percentage increase from 1984-85 to 1991-92.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is as follows:

English local authority settlement figures

Year	Grant related expenditure £ million
1984-85	19,882
1985-86	21,221
1986-87	22,790
1987-88	23,743
1988-89	26,006
1989-90	27,662

Year	Net total standard spending £ million
1990-91	29,805
1991-92	35,587

The increase from 1984-85 to 1991-92 was 84·3 per cent. taking into account changes of responsibilities with the introduction of the community charge system. Net total standard spending is equal to the aggregate of standard spending assessments and is broadly comparable with grant-related expenditure.

Timber

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken following the seizure in Oxfordshire of convention on international trade in endangered species appendix 1 listed timber in May 1992.

Mr. Maclean: This is a matter for Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, who are primarily responsible for the enforcement of CITES controls in the United Kingdom. I understand that an extensive investigation was carried out by their officers, but insufficient evidence was discovered to support a prosecution. Customs action has therefore been confined to the seizure of the timber.

Leaseholds

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he proposes to make for the establishment of a new advisory agency to assist leaseholders seeking enfranchisement.

Sir George Young: I announced on 17 November, during a sitting of Standing Committee B on the Housing and Urban Development Bill, that the Government would be prepared to contribute towards the costs of a leasehold enfranchisement advisory agency for an initial period. The Leasehold Reform Co-ordinating Committee is working on a scheme for such an agency and hopes to submit proposals shortly.

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many civil servants are currently employed by his Department (a) in London and (b) elsewhere.

Mr. Howard: The Department of the Environment currently employs 4,012 civil servants in London, 686 of them in agencies; 2,722 civil servants are employed elsewhere, 721 of them in agencies.

Elephants

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards the conservation of elephants.

Mr. Maclean: The Government share the widespread international concern about any threat to the survival of the elephant, and we have given strong support to efforts to conserve the species. For example, we are contributing £600,000 this year to a number of elephant conservation projects in Africa, in addition to our substantial support for general wildlife projects which also benefit elephants. We are committed to maintaining the current ban on the ivory trade for as long as necessary, and at the conference of the parties to the convention on international trade in endangered species in March, we played a leading part in opposing moves to allow a resumption of trade.

We also supported proposals made at the conference for more discussion between elephant range states and non-range states on the complex questions of elephant management and trade. To this end, one of the Department's senior officials is at present leading an EC fact-finding mission to Africa; they will meet policy makers, wildlife managers, conservationists and non-governmental organisations in a number of countries.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the budget for urban development corporations for 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire: The 1993-94 budget for UDCs will be announced as soon as the figures have been finalised.

City Challenge

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the planned expenditure on the urban programme in 1993-94; how much of this is to be diverted to city challenge; what plans there are to make city challenge available to all urban programme authorities; and what assessment he has made of the reduction in the number of jobs to be created resulting from the change in the urban programme funding.

Mr. Robin Squire: The answer is:

(a) A total of £176 million is to be made available to urban programme authorities in 1993-94; (b) None. City challenge resources for next year are additional to the £176 million; (c) All 57 urban programme authorities were invited to compete in round 2 of city challenge. The future of city challenge will be considered in the light of next year's review of urban needs and progress in the areas successful in the first two competitions; (d) Taking city challenge together with the urban programme, resources will rise from £319 million in 1992-93 to £408 million in 1993-94. I would therefore expect to see a corresponding increase in the number of jobs created as a result of this expenditure.

Urban Programme (Rochdale)

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the funds allocated to the urban programme for 1993-94 Rochdale will receive; and how much of Rochdale's allocation will be financed through (a) the sale of council houses and (b) the sale of council owned land.

Mr. Robin Squire: Local authorities' provisional urban programme allocations for 1993-94 will be announced next January as usual. Allocations will cover continuing commitments entered into in 1992-93 and prior years.

It is for the local authority to decide how to finance the 25 per cent. contribution it is required to make to urban programme revenue expenditure.

In assessing bids for the urban partnership fund in 1993-94, we will take account of the authority's willingness and ability to provide part of the finance from usable capital receipts.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many jobs have been created in the Rochdale area as a result of urban programmes in the last five years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The estimated number of jobs created/preserved in the Rochdale area as a result of urban programmes (UP) in the last five years is as follows:

	Number
1988-89	215
1989-90	693
1990-91	663
1991-92	4,900
[1]1992-93	150

[1]Interim estimate.

Sefton Metropolitan Borough Council

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet considered the response of Sefton metropolitan borough council to the notice served on the authority on 24 August under section 19A of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. and learned Friend has given careful consideration to the response which Sefton metropolitan borough council has made to the notice served on the authority on 24 August, and has today given a direction under section 19B of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980. The effect of the direction is that, after 1 June 1993, the authority will cease to have the power itself to carry out highways maintenance work as described in the authority's document entitled "Annual Service Contract No. 7".

He has also today served a notice on the council under section 19A of the 1980 Act setting out his view that in 1990-91 the authority had failed to achieve the required rate of return in carrying out the work described in section 10(2)(d) of the Act—maintenance work, other than such works of maintenance in connection with highways or the maintenance of a sewer. The authority is required to respond to the notice by 13 January 1993.

Direct Labour Organisations

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take against those local authorities whose direct labour organisations made significant financial losses in 1990-91.

Mr. Robin Squire: Statutory notices under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 and the Local Government Act 1988 were served on 36 local authorities between July and September of this year in respect of financial failure in 1990-91. My right hon. and learned Friend has now considered the responses of the 10 authorities on which notices were served on 16 July. He has today given directions under section 19B of the 1980 Act to Canterbury city council in respect of new construction work and to Halton borough council in respect of highways and sewerage work.

He has decided to take no further action in respect of financial failure in 1990-91 by Aylesbury Vale district council (building maintenance), Blackburn borough council (other cleaning), Gillingham borough council (building maintenance), Hampshire county council (ground maintenance), Kerrier district council (building cleaning), South Bedfordshire district council (building maintenance) and Wear Valley district council (building maintenance). In all these cases, either the relevant work is now being carried out by private contractors or the authority has demonstrated to my right hon. and learned Friend's satisfaction that it has taken the necessary remedial measures to ensure that statutory requirement were met in 1991-92 or are likely to be met in the current financial year.

Similarly, he has decided to take no further action for the present against the London borough of Tower Hamlets (building maintenance) and Halton district council (building maintenance) pending receipt of further quarterly financial returns. He is still considering responses from the remaining 26 authorities on which notices were served during August and September.

Airport Sales

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if a local authority will be entitled to spend all the capital receipts it receives from an airport sale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 26 November 1992]: Under regulations which came into force on 13 November 1992, local authorities may spend in full the capital receipts obtained between that date and 31 December 1993 from sales of most assets, including share or loan capital in airport companies acquired before 15 February 1989.

Correspondence

Mr. Spreat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average time taken by the Ministers in his Department, including himself, to answer letters from hon. Members, in each of the first three quarters of 1992, measuring the time from the receipt of the letter to the despatch of the substantive reply.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 1 December 1992]: It is not possible to identify from my Department's records an arithmetical average length of time taken to reply to an hon. Member's letter. Figures from my Department will be published in the Official Report, and made available in the House Libraries, early next year, showing the volume of ministerial correspondence from hon. Members in 1992, the targets set for reply and the percentage of replies within target. My Department's objective is to reply within three weeks of receipt, and this target was achieved for 58 per cent. of letters for hon. Members received in the first nine months of this year.

The table shows information for each of the first three quarters of 1992, and the year to date:

	Within 3 weeks Per cent.	Within 4 weeks Per cent.	Within 5 weeks Per cent.
1st quarter	65	84	93
2nd quarter	58	75	89
3rd quarter	46	69	83
Overall	58	76	91

Sheltered Housing

Ms. Joan Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the retention of sheltered housing incorporating a warden service.

Mr. Baldry: Clauses in the Housing Urban Development Bill will give housing authorities the powers to provide welfare services for the tenants and account for the costs within the housing revenue account. These powers would avoid disruption to these services following a Court of Appeal judgment. However, our policy is that the HRA should be a landlord account, and our intention is that these powers should remain in force only until local authorities have had an opportunity to make new arrangements for these services. Before we take any decisions about changes to the arrangements, there will be full consultation with all interested parties, early in the new year.

The Department has received approximately 130 representations about this subject from local authorities, their organisations and others. The powers in the Bill for housing authorities to provide welfare services and account for their costs in the HRA have been widely welcomed. Many of them suggest that welfare services should continue to be provided by housing authorities as part of the housing service, or at least until local government reorganisation is complete. These representations will be considered along with those received in response to next year's consultation exercise.

Government Car Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many organisations submitted tenders for the contract of supplying vehicles under the Government car service; which company won the contract; when the tender for the contract will next be advertised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

Cars for the Government car service are generally purchased by the Department of the Environment through a number of running contracts placed by the Ministry of Defence with vehicle manufactures. The requirements are advertised at approximately three-yearly intervals. The next advertisement is likely to be placed in 1994-95.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Legg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the differences between the European Economic Community established under the treaty of Rome and the union to be established by the treaty of Maastricht.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The union embraces both intergovernmental co-operation—in the fields of common foreign and security policy and justice/home affairs—and co-operation under the treaty of Rome. The Community institutions will act in the former fields under the provisions of titles V and VI of the Maastricht treaty, which sets out different rules from those applicable under the treaty of Rome.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the articles in the Maastricht treaty which he expects to give rise to the need for domestic legislation in each year from 1993 to 1999.

Mr. Garel-Jones: It is not possible to predict in which areas co-operation with the other member states in the period 1993-99 will give rise to a need for domestic legislation.

Esperanto

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding the use of Esperanto as a means of resolving linguistic problems within the European Community consequent on accession of Scandinavian and eastern European countries.

Mr. Garel-Jones: None. We would expect the rules governing the languages of the institutions of the Community to be a matter for consideration in the course of accession negotiations.

Languages (Convention)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries which have signed the Council of Europe convention for minority or regional languages, together with those eligible which have not signed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The following countries have signed the Council of Europe convention on regional or minority languages: Austria, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Hungary, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Malta, the Netherlands, Norway and Spain.

The following countries are eligible but have not signed: Belgium, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, France, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Poland, Portugal, San Marino, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey and the United Kingdom.

We are still considering whether to sign the European charter on regional or minority languages.

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many civil servants are currently employed by his Department (a) in London and (b) elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Goodlad: On 31 October 1992, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office employed 3,679·5 staff in London and 3,613·5 staff elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

Foreign and Security Policy

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the application of article J.5 of the provisions on a common foreign and security policy of the proposed treaty on European union in circumstances where United Kingdom policy or interests differ from the policy of the union as represented by the presidency.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Article J.5 of the treaty on European union provides for the presidency to represent the union on the basis of common positions within the common foreign and security policy. In order for there to be a common position, all member states must agree to it. Where there is no common position, member states speak for themselves. Article J.5(4) specifically safeguards the United Kingdom's ability to fulfil effectively its responsibilities as a permanent member of the United Nations Security Council.

Bosnia

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the enforcement by military means of a no-fly zone over Bosnia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We fully support United Nations Security Council resolutions 781 and 786, which ban military flights in the airspace above Bosnia-Herzegovina. The ban does not apply to United Nations protection force flights or to other flights in support of United Nations operations, including humanitarian assistance.

There have been no confirmed reports of combat activity involving aircraft over Bosnia-Herzegovina since 13 October. The Security Council resolutions have therefore had an effect. We are, however, concerned about reports from the United Nations Secretary-General of other flights over Bosnia-Herzegovina, apparently violating the ban. The Security Council made clear in SCR 786 its determination to consider urgently further measures to enforce the ban in the case of such violations.

Public Works

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will list the dates on which regulations equivalent to the Public Works Contracts Regulations 1991 were enacted or came into force in each other EC member state.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Council directive 89/440/EEC of 18 July 1989 was implemented in the United Kingdom by the Public Works Contracts Regulations of 21 December 1991. Latest information available from the European Commission on implementation for directive 89/440/EEC in other member states is as follows:

Denmark—8 June 1990 (further measures 14 August 1990 and 25 June 1991)
Germany—19 July 1990
Belgium—1 August 1990
Portugal—11 December 1990
France—3 January 1991 (further measures 31 March 1992)
Spain—18 April 1991
Netherlands—11 September 1991
Italy—27 December 1991
Ireland—1992

As at 28 September 1992, no notification of implementation had been received by the Commission from Greece or Luxembourg.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Third-country Nationals (Visas)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government in respect of whether the determination of which nationals of third countries will require visas to enter the United Kingdom should be made by the Council of the union acting by a qualified majority after 1 January 1996.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government accept article 100c—to be inserted into the treaty of Rome when the treaty on European union enters into force—which provides for member states to agree a common list of countries whose nationals will require a visa when crossing the external borders of member states.

Primates (Allegations)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the outcome of investigations into allegations by the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection in respect of the treatment of primates at Shamrock (GB) Ltd. and Hazleton UK.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office animals (scientific procedures) inspectorate has investigated the allegations contained in written and video material sent to the Home Office by the BUAV, in respect of the treatment of animals at Shamrock Farms and Hazleton UK. The results of that investigation have been reported to the Animal Procedures Committee and to me, and I have had the benefit of the APC's comments on those conclusions.

The investigation found evidence of poor standards of care and handling at Shamrock Farms, and a lack of effective managerial control. Insufficient attention was paid to the maintenance of a regime in which animals are treated at all times with due dignity and respect, and in which the physical and emotional needs of the animals are given proper emphasis. My conclusion is that poor technique and over-forceful handling may have resulted in avoidable stress and possible suffering.

I have concluded that these findings represent a significant failure on the part of the named day-to-day care person at Shamrock, and I have directed that Shamrock's certificate of designation be amended to appoint a new person to that role.

Other measures are being taken in the light of the report:

(i) I have concluded that new and existing staff at Shamrock should be trained in the wider ethical and legal issues associated with animal use; the nature and content of that training will be agreed between the management and the Home Office inspectorate.

(ii) Some aspects of the accommodation at both Shamrock and Hazleton fall short of desirable standards, and programmes of improvement and replacement of facilities have been developed or accelerated.

(iii) Another member of staff at Shamrock will be excluded from duties involving any further animal contact until he has satisfactorily completed the retraining already mentioned.

I am satisfied that other allegations are misconceived, may be based on a misinterpretation of legitimate procedures or are incapable of being proved one way or the other. All staff in the two establishments have been made aware, however, of the importance of the proper treatment of animals in their care, and the seriousness with which alleged breaches will be regarded.

The response which is being made to problems uncovered as a result of these allegations is firm, fair and designed to deal effectively with public concerns. I recognise that the use of primates in research causes particular anxiety, and I am pleased that the APC is considering the general questions raised. I look forward to hearing their conclusions.

Fire Cover, Cumbria

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment his advisers on fire services have made of the adequacy of the fire services provided by Cumbria county council; and what advice they have given on maintaining adequate cover within the standard spending assessment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Fire Services is satisfied that the Cumbria fire service provides effective and efficient fire services. It is for Cumbria county council to decide, in the light of its statutory responsibilities and of its standard spending assessment each year, on the level of provision which is allocated to the Cumbria fire service.

Domestic Violence (Northumbria)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Northumbria as to the number of officers in his force who have received training in dealing with domestic violence.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Eighteen officers have undergone specialist training. The subject is covered at a more general level in other training within the force.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many wives were (a) murdered and (b) assaulted by their husbands in the area covered by the Northumbria police force in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jack The number of wives who were the victims of offences currently recorded as homicide committed by their husbands in the Northumbria police force area in each of the last five years is a follows:

Year	Number
1987	1
1988	1
1989	1
1990	1
1991	—

Information on assaults of wives by their husbands is not collected centrally.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ask the chief constable of Northumbria to list the domestic violence units in the area covered by his force.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There is currently one such unit, situated at South Shields police station.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many husbands were (a) killed or (b) assaulted by their wives in the area covered by the Northumbria force in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jack: The number of husbands who were the victims of offences currently recorded as homicide committed by their wives in the Northumbria police force area in each of the last five years is as follows:

Year	Number
1988	—
1989	1
1990	—
1991	—

Information on assaults of husbands by their wives is not collected centrally.

Convicted Teenagers

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many teenagers are in secure accommodation following criminal proceedings.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: According to records held centrally, which are approximate, there were 4,800 prisoners aged 14 to 19 in secure prison service establishments on 30 June 1992.

Information supplied by the Department of Health shows that, on 31 October 1992, there were 119 teenagers serving sentences under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 in secure community homes or youth treatment centres. On 31 March 1991, the latest date for which such information is available, there were 12 teenagers subject to criminal care orders and 51 teenagers remanded to the care of a local authority held in secure accommodation.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young people in young offenders institutions are (a) convicted and (b) on remand.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table shows how many under 21-year-olds were held in prison service establishments in England and Wales on 27 November 1992.

Establishment type	Sentenced young persons	Unsentenced young persons	Total
Local prison	129	128	257
Remand centre	1,224	1,487	2,711
YO institution	4,214	0	4,214
Female establishment	50	48	98
Total	5,617	1,663	7,280

The figures for the unsentenced include remand, trial and convicted but unsentenced young persons.

Marriage Guidance

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement following his review of the funding of marriage guidance.

Mr. Jack: The marriage guidance organisations which receive grants from the Home Office will be notified shortly about their levels of grant for 1993-94.

Dyslexic Offenders

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to record the number of young offenders in remand centres or young offenders institutions who suffer from dyslexia.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The prison service has no plans to keep separate records of the number of young offenders who suffer from dyslexia. Particular emphasis is, however, placed upon assisting those young offenders in custody who have a range of learning difficulties. The White Paper "Custody, Care and Justice" (Cm 1647), published in September 1991, states that the first priority for education programmes in prisons must be to identify and provide help for those prisoners who have difficulty reading or writing, and who are unable to do simple arithmetic.

Guildford Four

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what public interest immunity certificates he has signed in respect of documents supplied by his Department to Sir John May's inquiry.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Metropolitan police as to what documentary evidence they have supplied to Sir John May's inquiry into the Guildford Four convictions; and on what terms.

Mr. Jack: No. Questions about the disclosure of documents held by the Metropolitan police are the responsibility of the Commissioner and not of my right hon. and learned Friend.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to publish all oral evidence taken by Sir John May in his inquiry into the Guildford Four convictions when the inquiry is completed.

Mr. Jack: As was the case in connection with the oral evidence given to his inquiry into the convictions of the Maguire family and those convicted with them, it will be for Sir John May to decide whether to take any oral evidence in connection with his inquiry into the convictions of the Guildford Four, and whether and in what form any such evidence should be included in his report to my right hon. and learned Friends or otherwise made public.

Forensic Science Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 3 November, Official Report, columns 129-30, what has been the cost to the Exchequer of the chief executive of the Forensic Science Service's visits to the Netherlands during the last 12 months.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This is a matter for which the Forensic Science Service is responsible and I have asked the chief executive to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Dr. Janet Thompson to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 1 December 1992:

You recently tabled a Parliamentary Question about my visit to the Netherlands. As you know, the arrangement now is that the Chief Executive of an Executive Agency, with the agreement of the Minister, replies to Members of Parliament on operational matters. I am therefore replying on behalf of the Forensic Science Service (FSS).

The one day visit to the Netherlands took place on 24 June. Its main purpose was a meeting of some of the heads of European Forensic Science organisations to discuss the possible establishment of a European Network of Forensic Institutes and the issues that were of common interest. The visit included a tour of the laboratory. The costs amounted to £305.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many former asylum seekers have been granted work permits in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 1 December 1992]: Comprehensive information on the number of asylum seekers who have withdrawn their application or have been refused asylum, and have subsequently been granted a work permit by the Department of Employment, is not available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Asylum seekers in the United Kingdom whose applications have not yet been decided may apply after six months from the date of application for authorisation to seek employment without a work permit. Persons granted asylum or exceptional leave are granted such authorisation at the time of the grant.

Commonwealth Exchange of Prisoners Treaty

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Nigerian Government in respect of ratifying the Commonwealth exchange of prisoners treaty; and what progress has been made in reaching bilateral agreements on sentencing and deportation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 23 November 1992]: The United Kingdom and Nigeria are both party to the multilateral scheme for the transfer of convicted offenders within the Commonwealth. There have been no bilateral discussions with the Nigerians about the scheme, or about agreements on sentencing and deportation.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister if he will agree to order that copies of all documents that are made available by Government Department's to Lord Justice Scott's inquiry in the export of arms, components and machine tools to Iraq shall also be made available on request to those committees of the Congress of the United States conducting comparable inquiries or investigations.

The Prime Minister: No, but requests for information will be considered on their merits.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister whether the briefing material relating to United Kingdom exports to Iraq, prepared for the Foreign Secretary's meeting with Tariq Aziz, the Iraqi Foreign Minister in September 1989, still exists; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Yes. The brief referred to British media interest in Iraqi procurement activities in the United Kingdom, naming Learfan and Matrix Churchill as examples. No further details were given and there was no other reference to United Kingdom defence exports to Iraq.

Civil List

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all the occasions since 1972 on which a reimbursement by Her Majesty the Queen of civil list annuities to the Treasury in relation to other members of the royal family has taken place and what sums were involved in each case.

The Prime Minister: Since 1975 Her Majesty the Queen has fully reimbursed the Consolidated Fund for the annuities paid under section 3 of the Civil List Act 1972. I will arrange for the right hon. Gentleman to have the detail of each refund.

Her Majesty The Queen (Taxation)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer to the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) of 26 November, Official Report, column 982, when the discussions with Her Majesty the Queen on taxation of her income began; and what consideration was given to the timing of the announcement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 1 December 1992]: Her Majesty indicated to me some months ago before the summer recess that she wished consideration to be given to the basis on which she might voluntarily pay tax. Once discussion had reached a stage where it was clear that arrangements could be put in place for next year, I agreed with Her Majesty that I should notify the House as soon as possible.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister how many public interest immunity certificates have been signed by Ministers in each of the last six months; and in what circumstances.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 November 1992]: Ministers signed two public interest immunity certificates in June, two in July, six in September, three in October and two in November.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals she has to improve and extend employment training schemes in areas directly affected by coal mine closures; and what age groups such schemes will cover.

Mr. McLoughlin: The training and enterprise councils in areas affected by potential coal mine closures have submitted action plans giving their proposals for a range of labour market measures. All unemployed people in areas most affected by pit closures and any redundant miners who live outside them will be eligible for assistance, including training, as appropriate. Local arrangements will depend on final action agreed with TECs.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals she has to increase the availability of statistics on the number of young people seeking a youth training place by district.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, to my hon. Friend the Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) on 1 December 1992, Official Report, columns 127-28.

Mr. Batcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what considerations underlie her policy of restricting places on the employment training scheme to unemployed people between the ages of 18 and 49 years; and if she will raise the upper limit.

Mr. McLoughlin: Employment training is open to unemployed people up to the age of 59 who meet the general eligibility conditions. However, those aged 50 and over do not fall within any of the categories of unemployed people who have priority for places. Under training for work, which is to replace employment training from April 1993, age will not be a factor in determining priority.

Accidents

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 114, what sorts of information relating to accidents at installations covered by the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984 are held by the Health and Safety Executive; what arrangements have been made for the analysis of information relating to accidents at such sites; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: In respect of accidents at an installation subject to the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazard Regulations 1984—CIMAH—that are defined as major accidents by regulation 2, the Health and Safety Executive—HSE—holds information provided by manufacturers in accordance with regulation 5(1). This requires that where a major accident occurs on a site, the manufacturer should notify the HSE and provide the following information as soon as it becomes available:

The circumstances of the accident;
The dangerous substances involved;
The data available for assessing the effects of the accident on persons and the environment;
The emergency measures taken;
A statement of the steps envisaged to alleviate the medium or long term effects of the major accident, if any and the steps necessary to prevent a recurrence.

In accordance with regulation 5(2) of CIMAH, the HSE is responsible for collecting information about major accidents to enable a full analysis to be made. The HSE complies with this requirement by investigating every major accident that occurs on a site subject to CIMAH, determining the cause, collecting information and sending a report to the European Commission for entering on a database used for accident prevention purposes. An analysis of such reports is sent to the competent authorities annually.

In respect of sites subject to CIMAH, the HSE also holds information on other accidents and dangerous occurrences not reportable under CIMAH, but which may be reportable to the HSE under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985. These are included in the statistical analysis published by the HSE in its annual reports.

Additionally the HSE uses the major hazard incident data service maintained by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's safety and reliability directorate—SRD—funded jointly by the HSE and SRD.

Wages Councils

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer on wages councils on 26 November, Official Report, column 830, when the decision to abolish wages councils was first published.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government's decision to abolish the wages councils was published on 5 November.

Factory Inspectorate

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the maximum current annual quota of factory inspectorate new recruits; and if he will ensure that the capacity for training recruits is not an artificial barrier to recruitment.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Executive estimates that it is possible at maximum to train 90 newly recruited factory and agricultural inspectors effectively each year.

There have been two competitions per annum in recent years to enable planned targets to be met. The rate at which new inspectors can be absorbed into the system is determined not only by institutional training capacity but also by the time of qualified inspectors taken up in training them on the job.

NORTHERN IRELAND

May Inquiry

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what public interest immunity certificates he has signed in respect of documents supplied by his Department to Sir John May's inquiry.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: None.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will call for a report from the Royal Ulster Constabulary on what documents they have supplied to Sir John May's inquiry and on what terms.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: No. Questions about the disclosure of documents held by the Royal Ulster Constabulary are the responsibility of the Chief Constable and not myself.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Slaughterhouses

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on behalf of small slaughterhouses since 1 October; and what measures he proposes to enable such businesses to survive in the single European market.

Mr. Gummer: Many right hon. and hon. Members have written to me about small slaughterhouses.

The Government welcomes the EC fresh meat directive 91/497 which will ensure that all meat traded in the single market is produced to common standards of hygiene and inspection—standards which have applied for almost 30 years to meat moving in international trade. It is high time for the same standards to be applied to meat intended for our domestic market.

The single market hygiene legislation is not intended to destroy traditional small businesses, which play an important part in the rural economy. My Department has taken a number of steps to ensure that this directive can be implemented sensibly and without imposing unnecessary burdens. During the EC negotiations, we secured agreement that very small abattoirs did not need to comply with all the detailed structural requirements and that all meat premises would be eligible for temporary derogations of up to three years from 1 January 1993 to enable them to upgrade their premises to meet the new standards.

The Agriculture Departments, as licensing authorities, have made arrangements for all operators to receive advice on what is required, and for ensuring consistent and sensible decisions on licensing. Our veterinary field staff have been instructed to be flexible and realistic in seeking solutions to structural and hygiene problems.

As a further safeguard, I have asked two independent experts in meat hygiene to assess hygiene standards in a small cross-section of plants and to advise whether the improvements being required exceed what is necessary to rectify structure-related hygiene problems.

My Department has this week issued further guidance to local authorities on the provision of veterinary supervision at slaughterhouses. This guidance, which has been placed in the Library, should reduce the estimated cost of the inspection service substantially at some plants. My Department believes that the cost to the industry as a whole should be reduced by some £2 million, compared with estimates made by independent consultants on behalf of MAFF earlier this year.

Local authorities have considerable flexibility to arrange provision of the inspection service in the way which is most appropriate to their local circumstances subject to the overriding need to achieve adequate veterinary supervision. Pending transfer of responsibility for meat inspection to the proposed national meat hygiene service, I shall monitor inspection charges very closely, and will continue to encourage plant operators to discuss with their local authority any possible options for reducing costs. Local authorities have discretion to recover less than the full cost of the inspection service if they so choose, provided the amount recovered complies with the relevant EC legislation. In the longer term, the national meat hygiene service will be required to provide an efficient and cost-effective service to the industry.

Despite all these measures, I am aware that there remains considerable concern about the impact of the new legislation on small slaughterhouses. This concern is not confined to the United Kingdom, and I am therefore arranging for the December Council of Agriculture Ministers to consider whether any further action at Community level is required to safeguard small traditional slaughtering businesses.

Oilseed Products

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons the European Economic Community rejected the appeal from the United States of America for a third party to determine by arbitration the level of damage to its interests occasioned by the subsidised production of oilseed products; at what meeting of the Council of Ministers this decision was made; and under what voting requirements.

Mr. Curry: The United States proposal for binding arbitration to settle the oilseeds dispute was rejected by the Commission after consultation with a committee of senior trade officials from member states, meeting under United Kingdom chairmanship during our presidency, because of doubts about its consistency with general agreement on tariffs and trade arbitration rules and because other approaches seemed to offer wider scope for an acceptable settlement. The proposal was not put to the Council of Ministers for a formal decision. A number of further options were put forward by both sides during bilateral negotiations before agreement was reached on a satisfactory compromise.

CAP and GATT

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give an estimate of the effect on job numbers in rural areas of (a) the current common agricultural policy reform package and (b) further changes arising from the general agreement on tariffs and trade agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The impact of the common agricultural policy measures agreed in May on employment in rural communities will depend on the response of the farming community over the next few years. The draft general agreement on tariffs and trade settlement is consonant with reforms already agreed and should therefore have no specific impact on employment in rural communities.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress establishing new environmentally sensitive areas; and what management commitments and financial remuneration he is proposing.

Mr. Curry: In January of next year we plan to launch new environmentally sensitive areas in the Avon valley, Exmoor, lake district, north Kent marshes, south Wessex downs and South West Peak. Full details of the management terms and financial remuneration will be published at the time of the launch. We also plan early next year to hold consultations on a further six new English environmentally sensitive areas which we hope to introduce in the following winter.

"A Fair Assessment"

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received against the National Rivers Authority's discussion document, "A Fair Assessment"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Ministry has received a small number of letters about the National Rivers Authority's discussion document. The authority is now considering the comments received in response to the document and, we understand, is looking at more detailed proposals for public consultation.

Intervention Cereal

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the level of cereal production held in intervention stocks in the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Curry: At 22 November 1992, information provided by the EC Commission showed that the level of cereals intervention stocks held in the Republic of Ireland was 81,182 tonnes.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of confirmed cases of BSE by county, for November.

Mr. Soames: The information requested from 1 November to 27 November 1992 for Great Britain is as follows. These cases will have a date of report and date of clinical onset of disease before 1 November.

Live Horses for Slaughter

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will use his role as President of the Council of Agriculture Ministers to prevent the introduction of the European Commission's proposal establishing a compulsory EC free trade area for live horses for slaughter after 31 December.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 1 December 1992 at column 159.

Coastal Wildlife

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the impact of his coastal defence policies on the loss of coastal wildlife habitats.

Mr. Gummer: The primary aim of both flood and coastal defence is to protect life and to reduce the risk of flooding or erosion causing damage to the natural and built environment. In pursuit of these objectives, MAFF gives financial support to capital schemes for flood and coastal defence which are cost-beneficial, technically sound and environmentally acceptable.

I share the concerns about the loss of coastal habitats and am determined to ensure that our policies for coastal defences help to tackle this problem. It is already well established that all coast and sea defences must take environmental considerations into account. The grant aid arrangements have been extended to facilitate the use of "soft" defence measures such as beach replenishment. However, in addition, in order to help stop the decline in the area of wildlife habitats around our coasts, I want the potential impact on coastal habitats to be a key consideration in examining proposed schemes; and there will be a clear presumption in considering applications for grant aid that, except where life or important natural or man-made assets are at risk, natural coastal processes should not be disrupted. I also want to see thorough consideration given in all appropriate cases to whether retreat from the existing line of defence could be managed in such a way as to bring environmental and/or engineering benefits.

This new approach will be reflected in the strategy for flood and coast defence which I am developing in consultation with the operating authorities and environmental interests, and I look forward to discussing this with them.

Meat (Inspections)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to ensure that there is an adequate number of official veterinary surgeons for slaughterhouse inspection; how many additional veterinary surgeons have been recruited by his Department; at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 26 November 1992]: Until the proposed national meat hygiene service is established, local authorities are responsible for employing official veterinary surgeons for the purposes specified in the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992 and the Poultry Meat (Hygiene) Regulations 1976. My Department runs courses for veterinary surgeons seeking designation as official veterinary surgeons. Some 300 veterinary surgeons have completed the red meat course in the last four years, and over 80 more are booked to attend the course in the new year.

The Department is discussing with the local authority associations ways in which MAFF might assist local authorities wishing to explore the possibility of recruiting veterinary surgeons from other member states where there is a surplus.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the additional costs to the meat industry of implementing the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 26 November 1992]: Work carried out by independent consultants on behalf of the Agriculture Departments in March and April 1992 estimated the cost of implementing the supervision requirements in the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992 as £33 million per annum, compared with £25 million previously—both figures based on 1991 costs and slaughterhouse numbers. The additional cost of veterinary supervision in medium-sized slaughterhouses was estimated to represent £5·4 million of this increase. However, we estimate that the guidance on veterinary supervision levels issued by the Department on 20 November would reduce this to £3·4 million. A copy of this guidance has been placed in the Library of the House.

The total costs to the industry of complying with the structural requirements of the new legislation, many of which were already contained in or implied by previous Great Britain legislation, will depend on the commercial decisions taken by individual slaughterhouse operators.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to suspend implementation of the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992 until he has received satisfactory assurances from each other EC country that they have implemented similar regulations.

Mr. Soames [holding answers 26 November 1992]: No. The Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992 are an important part of the Department's programme of improving the safety and hygiene of British meat and enhancing the protection offered to the consumer.

My right hon. Friend the Minister is, however, arranging for the December Council of Agriculture Ministers to discuss progress with implementation of the fresh meat directive 91/497, in particular as it relates to small slaughterhouses.

Cereals

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has made to the European Commission to have the cereal support system in Northern Ireland based upon individual cereal farms; which other community countries have indicated that they prefer the cereal support scheme to be based upon individual cereal farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: I have been asked to reply.

No representations have been made to the European Commission to have the cereal support system in Northern Ireland based upon individual cereal farms. The EC regulation establishing a support system for cereal producers makes allowance for base areas, but not yields, to be established on either a regional or an individual holding basis. No member states are operating individual base areas this year.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Charterline

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 13 November, Official Report, column 982, what is the cost of the contract with Price Waterhouse to pilot the charterline service.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is not our practice to reveal the cost of such contracts, as it could prejudice Her Majesty's Government's position when negotiating other contracts.

All payments are, of course, open to scrutiny by the National Audit Office.

Next Steps

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress of the next steps initiative.

Mr. Waldegrave: Next steps is progressing well. More than half the civil service is now working on next steps lines and next steps is delivering measurable improvements in efficiency, productivity and value for money.

The Government today published the third annual review of next steps agencies (Cm 2111). The annual review brings together information on all 76 established agencies, together with the 30 executive units of Customs and Excise and the 34 executive offices of Inland Revenue. The review shows performance against targets in 1991-92 and lists key targets for 1992-93. It shows that agencies have continued to perform well and have met three out of four of their targets in the last year. It gives many examples of the ways in which agencies are providing the better service to the public which is at the heart of the citizens charter and describes the many improvements which have been brought about for the benefit of taxpayers and staff.

Factory Inspectorate (Recruitment)

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many applications were received in the recent round of recruitment to the factory inspectorate; how many were recruited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

The number of factory inspectorate applications received for the autumn 1992 recruitment competition was 1,846. Of these, 360 have been selected for interview during December 1992 and January 1993, and the Health and Safety Executive expects to offer up to 45 factory inspector posts nationally.

Civil Servants

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many retired civil servants from the Health and Safety Executive have been subsequently re-employed; and what is the executive's policy on such re-employments.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

There are currently 16 retired civil servants from the Health and Safety Executive who have been re-employed. The HSE re-employs those who have retired, in accordance with civil service rules, where there is a clear need for particular skills or experience that is not otherwise available.

Mr. E. Whybrew

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the former Director of Personnel and Development in the Department of Employment, Mr. E. Whybrew, was re-employed by the civil service as a part-time officer in the Certification Office of Trade Unions; and whether the post he now occupies was advertised externally.

Mr. McLoughlin: Mr. Whybrew's appointment as certification officer for trade unions and employers' associations took effect from 6 October 1992. The appointment was made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State after consultation with the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service; the post was not advertised externally.

HEALTH

Research Units

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration she has given to the report of the team which reviewed the role and funding of her Department's research units; and whether she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have now considered the report of the review team chaired by Dr. Peter Williams, which outlines a strategy for the funding of long-term health services research. A copy of the report is available in the Library.

I accept the review team's view that some larger centres of multidisciplinary excellence could offer an improved career structure and a more secure base for research. We shall set up such a centre as a pilot project. Some smaller units will remain and current units producing excellent high priority research will be granted fixed-term programme contracts in place of their existing rolling contract.

Peer review and site visits to all units will take place over the next eighteen months. This process will be led by Professor Michael Peckham, the director of research and development.

Custody (Alternatives)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, in respect of each social services department, how many teenagers are on alternative-to-custody programmes, run by social services and/or the voluntary sector, following conviction for a criminal offence, on the last date for which information is available.

Mr. Yeo: Information is not available centrally in the form requested. Some information about young people involved in social service provision is published in "Supervision Orders and Intermediate Treatment; England" and in "Children in Care of Local Authorities; England". The most recent publications, for the year ending 31 March 1991, are in the Library.

Children's Homes (Schools)

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to amend the Children Act Regulations to provide exemption for small weekly boarding schools from registration as children's homes with the social services department.

Mr. Yeo: We are considering how this might be achieved.

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many civil servants are employed by her Department (a) in London and (b) elsewhere.

Mr. Dunnville: At 1 November 1992, the latest date for which detailed information is available, the Department of Health employed 1,013 whole-time equivalent civil servants in London and 1,715 whole-time equivalent civil servants elsewhere.

Limited List Prescribing

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health upon what basis she identified the 10 new categories of product which are now to be included in the limited list prescribing system for pharmaceutical products.

Dr. Mawhinney: The categories were chosen because they covered a range of products of varying price levels and therefore offered scope for savings while enabling all clinical needs to continue to be met.

Wigs

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when a rate was set to cover the cost of NHS wigs; how much it was; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Charges for national health service wigs were introduced in April 1971. The charge for a bespoke wig was £7·50 and £2·50 for a stock wig.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children received NHS wigs for medical conditions for each year since 1987; and if she will state for each year the number of wigs costing (a) less than £50, (b) between £50 and £60, (c) between £60 and £70, (d) between £70 and £80, (e) between £80 and £90, (f) between £90 and £100 and (g) over £100.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Mental Health

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response her Department has made to the fourth biennial report of the Mental Health Act Commission.

Mr. Yeo: I have written to Sir Louis Blom-Cooper, chairman of the Mental Health Act Commission, thanking the commission for the valuable work reflected in its fourth biennial report, which my right hon. Friend laid before the House on 16 December last. I have included with my letter our detailed responses to specific points made in the report, which have been agreed with my right hon. Friends so far as the Home Office and Welsh Office are concerned. I have today placed copies of my letter and the other documents in the Library.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been commissioned to consider the benefits to be gained from hearing aids.

Mr. Yeo: We have asked the Medical Research Council's Institute of Hearing Research to commence work on a research project: "Multiple outcome measures for evaluating hearing aid fitting". This work will investigate the benefit that people with a hearing impairment derive from an aid and how effective the aid is in alleviating disability. The research will take three years.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Attendance Allowance

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of people (a) currently in receipt of the lower rate of attendance allowance whose claims for medium or higher level allowance have been rejected but who are currently appealing against that decision and (b) currently assessed as eligible for the medium and higher rates of attendance allowance but not yet in receipt or notified of that award; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will increase the Christmas bonus to take account of the rise in prices or in average earnings, in each year since its introduction; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: No. Because the Christmas bonus is paid to all regardless of income, any increase in the amount would be a poorly targeted use of resources.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons local statistics on cold weather payments prior to 1 November 1991 were destroyed without being recorded on microfiche; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 1 December 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about cold weather payment statistics.

As you know, some local statistics had been destroyed in accordance with standing instructions. These instructions have been drawn up over some time (and applied before the Agency was formed). There is clearly a requirement to keep national information about Social Security benefits for a reasonable period of time, but in respect of local information, we need to balance this requirement against their diminishing relevance and the expenditure of public funds in the upkeep of excessive archives. This would include the transfer of records to microfiche.

It is against this background that no local statistics are held prior to the financial year 1991-92. Information covering the former DHSS North Eastern Region (which includes Doncaster local offices) is, however, in the Library.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Crisis Payments

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many crisis payments have been made to the victims of the Islington road flood in Islington by the Euston district social security office.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 1 December 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Social Fund crisis loan payments in Euston District.

Staff at Euston District acted immediately in response to the flood in Isledon Road that occurred on the evening of 15 October. A team of Social Fund Officers went to a local neighbourhood centre the following day and took applications to the Social Fund. Thirteen Social Fund awards were decided and paid on the same day in response to this crisis.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on future arrangements for independent living for the most severely disabled people.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1992, cols. 597-98]: A total of £4 million—on a United Kingdom basis—will be made available in 1993-94 to enable the new fund to provide cash payments to new applications from the most severely disabled people of working age. In 1994-95 the allocation will be £11 million and in 1995-96 it will be £17 million. It is expected that new awards will be made to around 1,500 severely disabled people each year.

This allocation is in addition to the sums earmarked for the fund to continue cash payments to around 22,000 cases which the ILF is expected to be paying by April 1993. These amounts—again on a United Kingdom basis—are £117 million in 1993-94, £119 million in 1994-95 and £121 million in 1995-96.

The allocation for new cases recognises the primary role of local authorities under the community care arrangements from April 1993. On 26 November the Secretary of State for Health announced increases to the community care special transitional grant—the means by which local authorities will initially be funded for their new community care responsibilities—in England of £26 million in 1993-94, £64 million in 1994-95 and £100 million in 1995-96. These increases reflect the further responsibilities for disabled people resulting from the planned changes to the ILF. Announcements will be made shortly about the specific allocations in the rest of the United Kingdom.

EDUCATION

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many civil servants from his Department have been relocated from London to other parts of the United Kingdom (a) in the last five years and (b) in the last 10 years; and to where they were relocated.

Mr. Forsyth: The Department has relocated 101 posts from London in the last five years, and 104 in the last ten. All relocations were to Darlington.

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many civil servants are currently employed by his Department (a) in London and (b) elsewhere.

Mr. Forsyth: The Department currently employs 1,398 full-time equivalent civil servants in London and 728 in Darlington. The Darlington figure includes 304 staff in the Teachers Pensions Agency.

Relocation to Darlington of some of the Department's work related to grant-maintained schools will result in a reduction by 58 FTE staff in London and an increase by 69 in Darlington by March 1993.

School Playing Fields

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) when he expects to complete his consultation on the disposal of school playing fields, arising out of his document issued on 19 December 1991; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his policy in regard to the selling off of playing fields for private development and the assessment of the long-term need for school or community use of those playing fields.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend expects shortly to inform local education authorities (LEAs) and others of his conclusions arising from this consultation exercise.

Any decision as to whether or not to dispose of school playing fields is a matter for the LEA concerned. It is the Government's policy to encourage LEAs to dispose of surplus land and buildings in order to avoid unnecessary expenditure and to realise capital receipts for debt redemption and reinvestment in education capital schemes. However, when considering decisions about the disposal of school playing fields we would expect LEAs to balance these considerations against the need to preserve facilities for potential future use.

School Buildings

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children currently receive their education in buildings that have been assessed as being in need of substantial repair as a result of inspection by Her Majesty's inspector of schools or otherwise.

Mr. Forth: This information is not available centrally. The repair and maintenance of school buildings is a matter for those with direct responsibility for the schools: local education authorities in the case of county and voluntary-controlled schools and governing bodies in the case of voluntary-aided and grant-maintained schools.

Salaries

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on his policy on salary settlements for academic and related staff (a) in the past three years and (b) in the light of the autumn statement.

Mr. Forsyth: Over the past three years the Government have looked to employers in higher education to settle the pay of academic and related staff. The Government have however influenced pay and conditions of service as necessary in the wider public interest through the level of funding provided for the higher education funding councils—for example, to support the introduction of performance-related pay. Under the policy of pay restraint in the public sector introduced in the autumn statement, the employers will still be responsible for resolving pay for academic and related staff, but will have to ensure that no more than 1·5 per cent. is added to their pay bill.

Esperanto

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what advice and assistance he gives to the teaching of Esperanto as a contribution to the linguistic problems of the single European market.

Mr. Forth: None. National curriculum requirements for modern foreign language learning give priority to the working languages of the European Community, and the other specified 11 languages of commercial or cultural significance, and any advice or assistance provided nationally is geared to those.

School Meals

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will include in the revised version of the parents charter the right to a nutritious school meal.

Mr. Forth: No.

Education Inspectors

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total cost of (a) salaries and (b) office accommodation for Her Majesty's inspectorate of education in 1988-89, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is as follows:

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
(a) Salaries	16·1	17·9	19·8	21·8
(b) Accommodation	1·1	1·2	1·4	1·5

The figures given at (a) relate to HMI and its support staff, and include overtime and national insurance. The accommodation costs are those incurred at HMI divisional and local offices only. The accommodation costs of HMI and support staff stationed centrally were included within the Department's total running costs and could not be disaggregated without disproportionate cost.

Office for Standards in Education

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many staff are currently employed by Ofsted; and what is its 1992-93 budget for (a) staff and (b) office accommodation.

Mr. Forth: When Ofsted was created on 1 September 1992, it had an initial budget for the remainder of the 1992-93 financial year of £11·7 million and staff, including HMI and support staff, of 550. Finance and staffing of Ofsted from 1 September are the responsibility of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools.

Education Inspectors

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many of Her Majesty's inspectors of education are (a) to retire or (b) be made redundant on 1 April 1993.

Mr. Forth: The number of Her Majesty's inspectors employed by the Department and planned to be made redundant on 1 April 1993 is 89. There are no retirements on that date.

I understand that no HMI employed by Ofsted will be made redundant or retire on 1 April 1993.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Public Record Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer of 12 November, Official Report, column 880, how long the Privy Council Office has had on loan from the Public Record Office (a) three volumes of Privy Council papers dating from the early 18th century and (b) papers relating to chartered corporations founded in the 19th century; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The material referred to was held for six weeks and three years respectively. All the papers have now been returned to the Public Record Office.

Universities

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many university statutes and charters are currently being considered by the Privy Council.

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council is currently considering seven applications from universities for changes in charters and statutes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the number of changes to university statutes and charters made by the Privy Council in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Newton: Changes to the charters and statutes of universities and colleges dealt with by the Privy Council Office for the years in question were as follows:

Year	Cases
1984	15
1985	15
1986	11
1987	14
1988	18
1989	14
1990	18
1991	15
[1]1992	[2]54

[1] To date.
[2] Includes modifications made by the University Commissioners under section 204 of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make it his policy that the Privy Council should not approve any further university charters and statutes which require each student to belong to a students' union.

Mr. Newton: It has not been the practice for university charters and statutes to require students to belong to a students' union.

SCOTLAND

Dental Caries

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the figures for the incidence of dental caries since 1979 in children (a) under primary school age, (b) primary school age and (c) secondary school age in (i) Dumbarton district, (ii) Inverclyde district, (iii) Argyll and Bute district and (iv) Renfrew district.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not available.

Tooth Extractions

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many tooth extractions are carried out each year since 1979 on children (a) under primary school age, (b) primary school age and (c) secondary school age in (i) Dumbarton district, (ii) Inverclyde district, (iii) Argyll and Bute district and (iv) Renfrew district.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not available.

NHS Expenditure

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average national health service expenditure since 1979 per patient using Argyll and Clyde dental services in (a) Dumbarton district, (b) Inverclyde district, (c) Argyll and Bute district and (d) Renfrew district.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not available.

Council Tax

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce details of his proposals for providing a council tax transitional relief scheme to accompany introduction of the council tax in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The change in the system of local taxation in Scotland will result in a redistribution of the burden of local taxation between households. While many households should gain from the change or face only a small increase in the contribution which they have to make, some households will have to bear a significantly larger share of the tax burden than they do under the community charge. We have provided temporary assistance for households required to pay more under the community charge and I believe it is reasonable to provide such assistance in Scotland in the change to the council tax.

I therefore intend introducing a council tax transitional relief scheme in Scotland similar to the scheme already announced for England by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. Under this, households in the lowest council tax band, band A, would be required to pay only the first £1·75 per week of the increase in bills due to the change in tax system, and households in the bands above this would be required to pay an additional 25p per week in each successive band, so that households in the highest band, band H, would be required to pay the first £2·50 per week due to the change in the tax system. The extra amount households would be expected to pay for each band are as follows:

Ranges of property values in band (at 1 April 1991)

		£ per week
Band A	Up to £27,000	1·75
Band B	Over £27,000 and up to £33,000	2·00
Band C	Over £35,000 and up to £45,000	2·25
Band D	Over £45,000 and up to £58,000	2·50
Band E	Over £58,000 and up to £80,000	2·75
Band F	Over £80,000 and up to £106,000	3·00
Band G	Over £106,000 and up to £212,000	3·25
Band H	Over £212,000	3·50

The calculation of reductions will be based on whichever is the lower of an authority's actual council tax for the valuation band concerned and its scheme council tax for that band. The cost of such a scheme next year is estimated to be up to £28 million and this cost will be reimbursed to local authorities under the scheme. I have asked my officials to consult with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on the details of the scheme. The scheme will then be implemented under regulations which I hope will be laid before the House shortly.

As a consequence of settling on the details of the council tax transitional relief scheme I am able to increase by £15 million the level of aggregate external finance for 1993-94 which I previously announced on 12 November. I can also announce today that I plan to add a further £2·8 million to both the Government-supported expenditure and AEF figures for next year in recognition of the additional responsibilities which local authorities will face from next April as a consequence of changes to the independent living fund which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security announced on 24 November. The result of these changes is that aggregate external finance next year will be £5,165·1 million, an increase of 3·5 per cent. on the equivalent figure for this year.

Environmental Education

Mr. Wm Gilbert: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the provision of training for teachers on cross-curricular themes, with particular reference to the theme of environmental education.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 November 1992]: In his guidelines for the construction of initial teacher training courses, my right hon. Friend requires that courses for primary teachers must include environmental studies as a significant element of the course. In addition, there are in-service training courses on environmental studies for teachers which may lead to the award of the primary environmental studies certificate. In-service training on the five to 14 curriculum development programme and the primary education development project also have significant elements related to environmental matters. Environmental education is included within the specific grant scheme for the in-service training of teachers, which supports education authorities' costs for such training in priority subject areas.

DEFENCE

RAF (Market-testing)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how the higher formation costs of RAF Support Command will be taken into account in respect of in-house bids in the market-testing competition for RAF establishments.

Mr. Aitken: The market-testing procedures provide for in-house costs to be compared with the prices offered by tenderers on a realistic and consistent footing. Only the resource costs that could be expected to change in the event of contractorisation are included in the in-house bid. The higher formation costs of RAF Support Command would be taken into account only to the extent that they would be affected were a given service or facility to be contractorised.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to ring-fence the higher costs of service men to ensure that in-house bids have a fair chance in the market-testing competition announced for RAF establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: As part of the market test, the in-house operation is encouraged to offer efficiency improvements, such as replacing more expensive military personnel with civilians, in order to become more competitive. Bids will be assessed on that basis. In-house bidders will also be encouraged to engage outside consultants to help with the preparation of their bids.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to ensure that there is a level playing field for in-house bids in the market-testing competition announced for RAF establishments.

Mr. Aitken: I have arranged to place a copy of the procedures for market-testing in the Library of the House. They require the in-house bid to be prepared against the same requirements, time scale and, so far as is practicable, contract conditions as the commercial tenders. The evaluation of tenders is carried out by officials in a neutral and objective position, and we are currently considering the means by which we can introduce independent observers into the process, as guarantees of fairness.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will introduce a leakage prevention programme for all refrigeration and air conditioning equipment owned and operated by his Department; if he will publish targets for reductions in leakages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: My Department's policy is to prevent leakage of ozone-depleting refrigerants to the atmosphere wherever possible. Special equipment is used during maintenance and repair to avoid venting to the atmosphere. Also, although no targets are published regular monitoring of refrigerants enables leakages to be detected and action taken.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will implement a refrigerant recycling and reclaim policy covering all departmental equipment currently using chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbons; if he will publish targets for departmental reuse and recycling; if he will implement an equipment conversion and replacement programme for all departmental uses of CFCs and HCFCs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: My Department is fully committed to the Government's policy for reducing the use of all substances controlled under the Montreal protocol. We already have a programme for refrigerant recycling and reclaim. We have no plans to publish targets but this will be carried out in accordance with the terms of the protocol. All equipment using CFCs and HCFCs is being identified and will either be replaced or converted to suitable alternatives. As an interim measure some will be supported by a bank of recycled substances.

Defence Research Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 3 November, Official Report, columns 105-11, what has been the cost to the Exchequer of the chief executive of the Defence Research Agency's visits to (a) the United States and (b) France during the last 12 months.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Defence Research Agency under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. A. R. Chisholm to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 2 December 1992:

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying directly to your question regarding the cost to the exchequer of my visits, as Chief Executive of the Defence Research Agency, to (a) the United States and (b) France during the last 12 months.

I visited the United States on two occasions and France on one occasion. The total costs for myself and accompanying official were as follows:

		Total cost £
(a) 18-19 March 1992	United States	1,926
10-17 June 1992	United States	6,202
(b) 1-2 April 1992	France	923

I hope you will find this information useful.

Meteorological Office

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 3 November, Official Report, columns 105-6, what has been the cost to the exchequer of the chief executive of the Meteorological Office's visits to (a) Geneva, (b) China, (c) France and (d) Norway during the last 12 months.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Meteorological Office under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. C. R. Hunt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 1 December 1992:

The costs to the exchequer were approximately (a) £2,300 (total for 3 visits), (b) £2,500, (c) £2,100 (total for 4 visits) and (d) £900. Reports are available on the visits if required.

You will be aware that international collaboration in meteorology is of crucial importance. As a leading climate and numerical weather prediction centre, with a large supporting research programme, and as one of two World Area Forecast Centres for civil aviation, the Met. Office plays a major role in these international activities which are co-ordinated through the World Meteorological Organisation, an agency of the United Nations. Furthermore, by sharing experience and collaborating with other scientific and commercial organisations and national meteorological services, the Met. Office is able to improve its efficiency and cost effectiveness.

A copy of the Met. Office's 1991-92 Annual Review is enclosed for your interest. Please do not hesitate to ask if you require further information.

Maintenance Group

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 3 November, Official Report, columns 105-11, what has been the cost to the Exchequer of the chief executive of the Maintenance Group Defence Support Agency's visit to Hanover on 12 to 13 March.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter delegated to the Maintenance Group Defence Support Agency under its framework document. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from Air Vice-Marshal D. R. French to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 November 1992:

In response to your Parliamentary Question of 24 November, the cost of my visit to Hanover on 12-13 March was £111·60.

Guildford and Woolwich Bombings

Mr. Mallin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what public interest immunity certificates he has signed in relation to documents provided by his Department to Sir John May's inquiry.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Bosnia

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many flights over Bosnia in contravention of the United Nations no-fly zone have been identified by radar surveillance deployed to monitor that zone; how many such flights have been directly involved in offensive missions; and what action has been taken in response to such flights.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Monitoring of compliance with the no-fly zone imposed on the airspace of Bosnia-Herzegovina in Security Council resolution 781 of 9 October is being conducted by aircraft of NATO's airborne early warning force and by ground monitors deployed at airfields in Bosnia, Croatia and Serbia/Montenegro by the United Nations protection force and the EC monitor mission. Immediately following the passage of the resolution there were a number of sorties by fixed-wing aircraft, which included the use of aircraft for ground attack. From 13 October to date, there have been no confirmed reports of any use of aircraft for ground attack or other combat purpose, by either fixed-wing aircraft or helicopters. The ban on flights in SCR 781 applies only to flights with a military purpose. Provision was made for exemptions, subject to prior approval by the United Nations protection force, for flights for humanitarian purposes or in pursuance of the peace process. In his periodic reports to the Security Council, the United Nations Secretary-General has reported that a total of 204 flights, predominantly by helicopters, have been recorded up to 26 November, other than those for which exemptions have been given, but that there has not been evidence on which to judge whether the flights were of a military nature. Action is being taken to remind the parties concerned of the requirement and procedures for the authorisation of flights. SCR 781 provides that, in the event of evident violations of the ban, the Security Council will consider urgently the further measures necessary to enforce it.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what examination his Department has carried out of the feasibility of the enforcement by military means of a no-fly zone over Bosnia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: United Nations Security Council resolution 781 of 9 October 1992 banned flights with a military purpose by the warring parties in the airspace of Bosnia-Herzegovina. It did not itself contain provision for enforcement, but provided for regular reports by the Secretary-General on compliance with the ban, and for the Security Council to consider urgently the further measures needed to enforce the ban in the event of violations. The Security Council made clear in SCR 786 of 11 November its determination to do so if necessary.

WALES

Capital Receipts

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total of accumulated capital receipts held by Welsh district councils resulting from the sale of council houses.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest information relates to 31 March 1992. At that date, local councils held £27·4 million of usable housing capital receipts. At the same date, after allowing for redemption, Welsh local councils had net outstanding loan debt of £984·4 million.

Hospital Construction

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the hospital (a) building programmes and (b) extension and unit programmes currently under way in Wales;

(2) if he will list the hospital extension programmes and new units that are planned for Wales by the year 2000;

(3) if he will list the new hospitals that are planned to be completed in Wales by the year 2000.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The following lists of schemes give the centrally funded capital building programme for 1992-93 and, separately, those new hospital schemes included in the All Wales capital programme for completion by the year 2000. Minor works programmes are for determination by district health authorities from their minor discretionary capital allocations. Proposals for major hospital extensions and new units are considered annually for inclusion in future years and district health authorities and NHS trusts are invited to submit bids for appropriate schemes. These will still be subject to the usual planning procedures.

Unemployment

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in each Welsh constituency have been unemployed for (a) more than six months and (b) more than one year.

Mr. David Hunt: The unemployment data requested are available from the NOMIS database, which can be accessed on-line by House of Commons Library staff.

Cars

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the total number of registered cars in Wales in each of the last five years; and if he will publish figures showing the number of cars owned per adult in Wales in each year.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The numbers of private and light goods vehicles registered in Wales and the numbers owned per adult in Wales are given in the table.

Road Safety

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide funding to Clwyd county council to enable them to fund road safety personnel on the A55 at Hawarden high school, following diversion of traffic from the A494.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Hawarden high school is on the B5125. The B5125 is not being signed as a diversionary route as part of the A494 Aston hill reconstruction works. The local highway authority for the B5125 is Clwyd county council and it is responsible for all matters relating to road safety, including funding on that road.

Car Owners

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of people in Wales classified within the lowest 25 per cent. income bracket own cars.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Over the two-year period 1990 to 1991, an estimated 14 per cent. of those households in Wales with the lowest 25 per cent. of incomes owned at least one car. (Source: Family Expenditure Surveys).

Health Authority Funding

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, columns 317-20, (1) what monitoring his Department has undertaken of each of the allocations made to Clwyd health authority in respect of the number of extra patients treated; and if he will list the relevant figures;

(2) what monitoring his Department has undertaken of each of the allocations made to East Dyfed health authority in respect of the number of extra patients treated; and if he will list the relevant figures.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Early initiatives were assessed on the basis of reports prepared by the health authorities involved. The 1991-92 and 1992-93 initiatives are being monitored by NHS Wales' value-for-money unit on behalf of the Department. The additional throughput facilitated by the initiatives for Clwyd and East Dyfed is as follows:

Additional throughput contracted for Clywd and East Dyfed health authorities

Clwyd
1989-90 20 hip replacements
1990-91 240 ENT patients
1991-92 300 urology patients

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines to local authorities in Wales allowing them to confine lorries over 17 tonnes over 12 m long to motorways, most A roads and certain other designated roads.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Guidance on lorry controls has been issued to local authorities in Welsh Office circular 24/82.

Financial Sector Jobs

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many jobs were created in the financial sector in Wales in each year since 1989.

Mr. David Hunt: Between June 1989 and 1992 the number of employees employed in the banking, insurance and finance sector increased by 21,000. While comprehensive information on total jobs created is not available, levels of employment in this sector in Wales each year are given in the following table:

Employees in banking, insurance and finance

Year	Thousands at June

1991	90

A487, Gwynedd

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest estimate of the commencement date for the Llanllyfwi Penygroes and Groeslow bypass scheme on the A487 trunk road in Gwynedd; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The A487 Penygroes-Llanllyfni bypass scheme is planned to start between April 1995 and March 1998.

Training Schemes

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales are currently on training schemes sponsored by local government.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not available centrally. Local training provision, including any through training schemes sponsored by local government, is negotiated between providers and individual training and enterprise councils.

Travel Statistics

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what figures he has showing the average length of journey in Wales from home to (a) hospital, (b) leisure facilities, (c) shopping facilities and (d) the place of work in Wales during each of the last 15 years, nationally and by local authority.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the average length of journeys is available only for Wales as a whole from the national travel survey. Figures from the latest survey for which Welsh results are available are given in the table.

Cancer Centre

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the siting of the north Wales cancer centre.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The establishment of a dedicated cancer treatment centre in north Wales is dependent upon the outcome of the investment appraisal currently under way.

"This Common Inheritance"

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the likely cost of local authorities in Wales of implementing recycling plans to meet the targets set out in "This Common Inheritance"; and what percentage of those costs will be met by his Department by specific grant.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information will not be available until local authorities have prepared their recycling plans in accordance with section 49 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The costs will be funded through the unhypothecated element of the local government revenue settlement.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of confirmed cases of BSE by county, in each month since January 1990.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of confirmed cases of BSE by county, in each month since January 1990 is shown in the following table:

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Exports (Single Market)

13. Mr. Trimble: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will make a statement on progress towards the removal, in the context of the single market, of bureaucratic impediments to exports.

Mr. Needham: Good progress has been made towards completion of the single market, including free movement of goods within the Community. The single market will indeed be open for business by the end of 1992 target date.

Iraq

17. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter dated 20 June 1990 from his predecessor's principal private secretary to the private secretary to the chairman of the Commissioners for Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Mr. Hamilton: No. The letter is one of the documents disclosed to the defence for use in connection with the Matrix Churchill trial. Lord Justice Scott will of course have full access to all relevant papers.

24. Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his Department's role in the approval of Matrix Churchill exports to Iraq, and his signing of public interest immunity certificates relating to documents relevant to the conduct of the prosecution of Matrix Churchill executives.

Mr. Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the speech I made in the House on 23 November, at columns 640-53. It is now for Lord Justice Scott to consider this issue under the terms of his inquiry.

Trading Standards Officers

17. Ms. Rachel Squire: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current shortfall in the number of trading standards officers; and what estimate he has made of its impact on the consumer protection service.

Mr. Leigh: The total number of trading standards officers in post in local authorities at 1 April 1992 was 288 below complement. This is a shortfall of 15 per cent. The size of the shortfall and its impact varies from authority to authority.

Small Firms Merit Award for Research and Technology

19. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many companies in the south of England have won SMART awards.

Mr. Leigh: A total of 241 projects have been supported in the South of England—152 in the south-east—under the small firms merit award for research and technology since 1988.

Small Businesses

20. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the level of Government financial assistance to small businesses in each year since 1990-91, expressed in 1990 prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hamilton: Government provides assistance for small businesses in many ways. Interest rates are at their lowest level since 1978 and are the lowest in the European Community. Inflation has been below the EC average for over a year. We have one of the most favourable corporation tax structures in the major industrialised countries. We have increased capital allowances to bring forward investment. In addition, specific help provided by the Department of Trade and Industry, the Department of Employment and the Scottish and Welsh Offices, including assistance provided via training and enterprise councils, local enterprise companies and other agencies, was £302 million in 1990-91, £292 million in 1991-92 and a planned £277 million in 1992-93, expressed in 1990 prices.

Microwave Modules

21. Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what meetings took place between his Department and Microwave Modules, or Microwave Modules International, between 1985 and 1990.

Mr. Salisbury: Representatives of my Department have had meetings and other contracts with representatives of these companies covering a variety of subjects for which my Department is responsible.

Newspaper Distribution

22. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects the Director General of Fair Trading to complete his inquiries into newspaper distribution practices.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Director General of Fair Trading referred the supply of newspapers from publishers to wholesalers, and wholesalers to retailers, in England and Wales to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on 19 August this year. The commission was asked to report to my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade within 12 months.

Manufacturing

23. Mr. Soley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what new proposals he has to assist manufacturing industry.

Mr. Heseltine: The autumn statement contained a wide range of measures to help industry. It increased capital allowances, protected major public sector capital projects, encouraged private sector finance for public sector projects, provided £700 million extra help for exporters and abolished special car tax. In addition, I have restructured my Department so as to provide a more immediate response to the needs of industry. This includes major new initiatives on deregulation and in support of exports.

27. Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to assist the manufacturing industries in the northern region.

Mr. Salisbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 16 November, at columns 71-72. The importance of manufacturing industry in the north is recognised by the wide range of the Department of Trade and Industry's services available to the region.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will meet representatives from the Confederation of British Industry's manufacturing council to discuss the key findings of its recent report on manufacturing.

Mr. Salisbury: The launch of the CBI manufacturing council report was accompanied by a debate on 10 November at its conference. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade took part in that debate, replying on behalf of the Government.

Foam-filled Furniture

25. Mr. McCartney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further representations he has made to the European Commission to ensure that United Nations consumers continue to receive protection against dangerous foam-filled furniture.

Mr. Leigh: In May 1991 the Commission announced its decision to suspend further work on the preparation of directive on the fire behaviour of upholstered furniture pending research to establish criteria for test methods. In informal contacts with the Commission, my Department has continued to make it clear that the United Kingdom will retain its furniture regulations until there is agreement on a directive which will afford a level of fire protection commensurate with our prevailing requirements for furniture containing foam and other filling material.

Pit Closures

26. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he was made aware of the inclusion of the Point of Ayr colliery in the list of coal mines proposed for closure by British Coal.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend and I were informed by British Coal of the names of the 31 pits which it proposed for closure, which included Point of Ayr, on 12 October.

Clean Coal Technology

28. Mr. Madel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received since 1 October concerning the future development of clean coal technology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has received a number of letters supporting the development of clean coal technologies since 1 October. The Government recognise the importance of developing clean coal technologies and my Department is supporting a wide range of clean coal projects in partnership with the British Coal Corporation, UK industry, the European Commission and the International Energy Agency. At present, around 30 projects are under way, with a contract value of over £100 million. A number of further projects are at the planning stage.

The development of clean coal technologies are of worldwide interest and my Department has taken the lead in establishing a number of international agreements covering information exchange and collaborative R and D under the auspicies of the International Energy Agency, European Commission R and D programmes and with the United States Department of Energy.

Single Market

29. Mr. Luff: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the progress being made with the completion of the single market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Progress on completing the Commission's White Paper is good, with over 90 per cent.

of the measures agreed by the member states. Under the United Kingdom presidency we are seeking agreement, where possible, on the remainder, although it is recognised that some have a low priority and that agreement will not be reached on all. There has, in addition, been agreement on a large number of other measures, not included in the White Paper.

These measures should offer major benefits for industry enabling British firms to offer a wide range of goods and services throughout the Community unimpeded by different national rules, standards or testing practices.

However, these benefits will be felt only if there is effective enforcement of these rules in all member states. To this end, the United Kingdom presidency has initiated and obtained agreement on a resolution on making the single market work. This lays down practical steps to ensure the effective appliction, operation and enforcement of EC legislation in all member states.

Balance of Payments

30. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to enable the United Kingdom balance of payments to benefit from the depreciation of pound sterling where (a) there are no United Kingdom suppliers of manufactured components and (b) where the United Kingdom supplies are of low quality.

Mr. Needham: My Department helps United Kingdom manufacturers to identify and take full advantage of market opportunities at home and abroad by stimulating innovation and encouraging best practice in quality, design and management.

Coal Industry

31. Mr. Skinner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will meet NUM representatives to discuss the future plans for the coal industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: I will meet a delegation from the National Union of Mineworkers on 7 December.

Telephone Sex Line Services

32. Mr. Lewis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further representations have been made by his Department to Oftel about the influence of telephone sex line services.

Mr. Leigh: None. The independent committee for the supervision of standards of telephone information services —ICSTIS—is an effective regulator of the premium rate telephone service industry. The ICSTIS code is kept continuously under review and it was further strengthened this year. Therefore, we believe adult premium rate telephone services are strictly controlled.

Coal Imports

33. Mr. Barron: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the latest available figures for coal imports for 1992.

Mr. Eggar: The amount of coal imported into the United Kingdom in 1992 up to the end of September was 15,972,000 tonnes.

Departmental Subcontractors

34. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many small businesses subcontracted to carry out work for his Department have currently not received payment for work invoiced more than 30 days ago.

Mr. Leigh: This information is not available and could be provided only at disporportionate cost.

However, I can assure the hon. Member that I do recognise the importance of prompt payment of bills, especially to small businesses. The Government should set an example in this.

In accordance with Treasury guidelines, my Department requires its suppliers or contractors to settle all invoices with its subcontractors within the agreed credit terms or, where no credit terms have been agreed, within 30 days of receipt of an approved invoice.

Plant and Equipment

35. Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to encourage investment in new manufacturing plant and development by United Kingdom-owned companies.

Mr. Salisbury: Investment will be encouraged by the profitable and competitive manufacturing base which our policies are designed to ensure.

Aerospace Industry

36. Mr. Purchase: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his Department's assistance to the British aerospace industry.

Mr. Salisbury: Since 1979 the Department of Trade and Industry has provided over £1·5 billion in support to the United Kingdom aerospace industry.

Laboratory of the Government Chemist

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will list by (a) date, (b) destination and (c) cost to the Exchequer of the chief executive of the Laboratory of the Government Chemist's visits to Europe since he was appointed in May 1991;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 9 November, Official Report, columns 603-5, what has been the cost to the Exchequer of the chief executive of the Laboratory of the Government Chemist's visits to (a) Japan and (b) the United States since he was appointed in May 1991.

Mr. Eggar: As this is an operational matter, I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. D. Worswick to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 30 November 1992:

As these questions complement one another, it is more constructive for me to cover them in one reply.

The details of my overseas visits are as follows:

Destination and date	Cost (£K)
Europe
Eurolab, Berlin—22-24 May 1991
Community Bureau of Reference (BCR), Brussels—5-6 June 1991
BCR, Brussels—15-16 January 1991
Eurolab, Strasbourg—29-31 January 1992

Destination and date	Cost (£K)
Central Bureau of Nuclear Measurements, Geel—11-13 November 1992
TOTAL	2·4
USA
Association of Analytical Chemists (AOAC), National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) and Analytical Laboratory Managers Association (ALMA)—21-25 October 1991	2·7
Japan
High Level Mission—29 August/6 September 1991	4·4

The cost comprises travel and subsistence.

Many of the visits to Europe and the USA were made in connection with the Validity of Analytical Measurement initiative. The Laboratory undertakes this work for the Department of Trade and Industry on a customer-contractor basis. I am a UK representative on the BCR Management Committee and the Eurolab General Assembly. The High Level Mission to Japan was funded under the DTI's Overseas Science and Technology Expert Mission Scheme (OSTEMS). A report on this Mission was published in January 1992.

I hope this information is of assistance.

Radiocommunications Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 9 November, Official Report, columns 603-5, what has been the cost to the exchequer of the chief executive of the Radiocommunications Agency's visits to Australia and New Zealand during the last 12 months.

Mr. Leigh: As this is an operational matter for the agency, I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from M. J. Michell to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 26 November 1992:

The total cost of the visit I made earlier this year to Australia and New Zealand to discuss questions of spectrum management policy, accompanied by a colleague, was £6,550. As a net running costs agency, the Radiocommunications Agency's operating costs are met by its income. This is received from fees charged to users of radio transmission equipment and certain other sources.

Middle East (Exports)

Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance is provided by his Department for exporters looking to open up markets in the middle east.

Mr. Needham: The Government's overseas trade services are available for most middle east markets and many exporters use them. This year the DTI is supporting 26 trade missions and a United Kingdom presence at 24 trade fairs in the area. It is particularly encouraging that a substantial number of participating companies are new exporters to the region. Export Credits Guarantee Department support is also available for credit-worthy middle east markets. We also see considerable scope in these markets, which last year took United Kingdom exports of £7 billion, for using some of the 100 secondees my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade plans to recruit from industry to assist with the promotion of United Kingdom exports.

Exports

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what evidence he has of improved British export performance in the last 10 weeks.

Mr. Needham: United Kingdom figures are not available on a weekly basis. In the three months to October 1992, United Kingdom exports had increased by 2 per cent. by value, and 4 per cent. in volume terms, compared with a year earlier.

Consumers Affairs Council

Mr. Batiste: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the outcome of the Council of Ministers (Consumer Affairs) held in Brussels on 3 November.

Mr. Leigh: My noble Friend the Baroness Denton, the Minister for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms, was in the chair for the meeting of the Council on 3 November.

The Council reached political agreement to a common position on the proposed sixth amendment to the directive on the approximation of the legislation of the member states on cosmetic products. This was made possible by the incorporation of a presidency proposal: a ban of the use of ingredients tested on animals for cosmetics after 1998 but with an obligation on the Commission on scientific advice to make a proposal to the appropriate regulatory committee to postpone this ban if alternative tests have not been developed in time.

The Council held an orientation discussion on the proposed directive on timeshare which revealed strong support for the measure from members of the Council. There was useful clarification of the positions of member states on four key issues—the scope of the directive, the information in the brochure and contract, withdrawal periods and reimbursement upon withdrawal. It is likely that political agreement will be reached during the Danish presidency.

There was a short debate on the proposed directive on distance selling which highlighted the reservations voiced by several member states, particularly as to whether or not services, and most notably financial services, should be included within the scope of the directive. The permanent representatives committee will continue to examine the proposal, with particular reference to the opinion of the European Parliament.

Commissioner Van Miert gave a presentation to the Council on the consumer aspects of the report by the high-level group chaired by Peter Sutherland on the operation of the single market.

In addition, on the basis of a paper from the presidency, the Council explored the question of the need for increased co-operation between enforcement authorities in member states in order to secure the benefit of the single market for consumers. Discussion revealed that delegations were interested in such co-operation, particularly based on existing national structures.

The Commission described progress that had been made on the implementation of the Community scheme for the rapid exchange of information on dangers arising from the use of consumer products and outlined the current state of work on the European home and leisure accident surveillance system.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish details of Government spending on renewables research and development for the current financial year broken down by the energy source.

Mr. Eggar: The estimates provision for the renewable energy research and development programme for 1992-93 is detailed in table 7 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans within the Energy Sector 1992-93 to 1994-95".

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the names of the members of the Renewable Energy Advisory Group together with their credentials; and if he will make a statement on their agenda for the current financial year.

Mr. Eggar: The Renewable Energy Advisory Group was appointed in 1991 to review the Government's strategy to stimulate the development and application of renewable energy technologies wherever they have prospects of economic viability and environmental acceptability. Its report will contribute to the Government's overall review of renewable energy and will be published shortly.

Membership of the group is as follows:

Dr. Martin Holdgate[1] Chairman
Director General, International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources; formerly Deputy Secretary, Environment Protection and Chief Environment Scientist, Department of the Environment.

Dr. Mary Archer
Chairman, National Energy Foundation.

Mr. John Bellak
Chairman, Severn Trent plc.

Professor Sir Hermann Bondi
Fellow, formerly Master, of Churchill College, Cambridge; formerly Chief Scientific Adviser, Department of Energy and Chairman, Natural Environment Research Council.

Mr. Peter Goldsworthy
Director of Electricity Generation, NORWEB plc.

Mr. David Heathcoat-Amory[2]
Formerly, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of Energy.

Mr. Gerald Leach
Senior Research Fellow, Stockholm Environment Institute.

Dr. David Lindley, Managing Director, National Wind Power Ltd.

Mr. Colin Moynihan[3]
Formerly, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of Energy.

Mr. Peter Oppenheimer
Student in Economics, Christ Church, Oxford; Chairman Caminus Energy Ltd.

Mr. Jeremy Sainsbury
Sole agent, Fred Olsen Ltd.

Professor Arnold Wolfendale
Astronomer Royal, and Professor of Physics at Durham University.

[3] Chairman and Member until April 1992.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his policy for market-based support for the renewable energy technology through the non-fossil fuel obligation and the fossil fuel levy, with percentage and cash figures for each.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend's policy is to make renewables orders during the 1990s to support 700 MW of renewable generating capacity; the amount of support required through the levy will depend upon the contribution to generators' costs made by revenue from market sales. My right hon. Friend will review this policy in the light of the report from the Renewable Energy Advisory Group, taking into account the coal review now in progress.

Waste to Energy

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the present level of subsidy for electricity per kilowatt hour through the non-fossil fuel obligation; and how much this represents per tonne of waste incinerated in waste to energy schemes.

Mr. Eggar: The details of the price support arrangements differ from order to order, and from technology to technology. However, for municipal waste incineration projects contracted by the regional electricity companies in fulfilment of the 1991 renewables order, a price of 6·55p/kWh will be paid from the due commissioning date until 1998. Assuming an electricity pool price of 3p/kWh, the premium above the pool price approximates to £17 per tonne of waste incinerated until 1998.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what price per kWh is currently paid by regional electricity companies for electricity generated from (a) coal and (b) municipal waste.

Mr. Eggar: The terms of contracts are a commercial matter for the companies concerned.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the quantity of electricity that may be generated from waste to energy incineration projects by the year 2000; and what quantity of coal is needed to generate an equivalent amount.

Mr. Eggar: No firm estimates have been produced of the capacity of electricity generation plant likely to be generated from waste to energy incineration projects by the year 2000. However, if all the domestic waste incineration projects contracted under the first two rounds of the non-fossil fuel obligation came to fruition, the total capacity in place would be over 300 MW. This capacity would generate approximately the same amount of electricity per year as could be generated from 1 million tonnes of coal.

Electricity

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will estimate the cost to the coal industry of the subsidy given through the non-fossil fuel obligation for electricity generated by (a) nuclear power, (b) waste incineration and (c) renewables, including wind, wave, tide and solar power.

Mr. Eggar: The above-market element of the price paid to generators contracted under the non-fossil fuel obligation is financed through a fossil fuel levy paid by electricity consumers.

Car Advertisements

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce new guidelines for the Advertising Standards Agency limiting references to engine performance and speed acceleration in car advertisements.

Mr. Leigh: The Advertising Standards Authority requires that all advertisements should be legal, decent, honest and truthful and should conform to its British code of advertising practice.

The Advertising Standards Authority already monitors car advertisements for claims relating to speed, power, acceleration and performance. Its April 1992 survey confirmed an overall improvement in compliance with British code of advertising practice of car performance advertisements.

The Advertising Standards Authority will investigate any written complaint about advertisements, and if the hon. Gentleman has details of any particular advertisement, I suggest that he contact the Advertising Standards Authority direct.

The British code of advertising practice is due to be substantially reviewed early next year. Although the terms of reference for that revision have yet to be decided, the Advertising Standards Authority says that they are likely to be wide ranging.

Oil and Gas

Mr. Ancram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he is taking to reduce the burden of regulation on United Kingdom oil and gas field development and production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: On 22 October I published the report of a recent scrutiny by my Department which recommended a number of measures to reduce the burden of regulation in this area. A copy of the report was placed in the Library of the House. I will be implementing the changed procedures recommended in the report in full. They have been welcomed by the oil and gas industry.

Debt Payments

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 18 November, Official Report, column 225, on late payments to small businesses, what is the value of his Department's financial support for the pilot prompt payment initiatives; and if he will list the three trade associations involved in the initiatives.

Mr. Leigh: The three trade associations contracted for the prompt payment initiatives are:

The Mechanical and Metal Trades Confederation
Walsall Chamber of Commerce and Industry
The Federation of Master Builders

Funding will be met as required, subject to a maximum spend by the Department of £90,000.

German Coal Industry

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has made to the EC about subsidies paid by Germany to the German coal industry; and what EC rules and conditions apply to them.

Mr. Eggar: We have made representations to the Commission about contract arrangements in Germany which could have the effect of excluding other Community producers, including British producers. All aids by member states to their coal industries must be approved by the Commission within the terms of decision 2064/86/ECSC.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what separate provision Nuclear Electric has made for decommissioning of nuclear power stations.

Mr. Eggar: Nuclear Electric's 1991-92 report and accounts show that the company's balance sheet at 31 March 1992 contained total nuclear provisions of £9,883 million. Of that total, some £1,699 million represented provisions in respect of the decommissioning of the company's nuclear power stations.

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many civil servants are currently employed by his Department (a) in London, (b) in Scotland and (c) elsewhere.

Mr. Eggar: The information is as follows. Figures relate to staff in post on 1 October 1992—part-time staff are counted as half.

	Number
London	7,030
Scotland	525
Elsewhere	4,405

Collaborative R&D Projects

Dr. Moonie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will list the name of each company which received an award from his Department under the LINK scheme, the programme area of each award granted and its value, in each year since 1990-91;

(2) if he will list the name of each company which received an award from his Department under the small firms merit award for research and technology scheme, the project title of each award granted and its value, in each year since 1990-91;

(3) if he will list the title of each advanced technology programme, the value of each programme and the names of each organisation involved in the programmes, in each year since 1990-91;

(4) if he will list the name of each company which received an award from his Department under the EUREKA programme, the project title of each award granted and its value, in each financial year since 1990-91;

(5) if he will list the name of each company which received an award from his Department under the support for products under research scheme, the project title or process name of each award granted and its value, in each year since 1990-91.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 1 December 1992]: It is not the normal practice of the Department of Trade and Industry to publish names of recipients of grants for collaborative research and development projects. Such information is treated as commercial-in-confidence. However, under the SMART competition and the support for products under research—SPUR—scheme, companies specifically agree to disclosure of their names, and in the case of SPUR they also agree to disclosure of the value of the grants.

Recipients of grant offers under SMART and SPUR are listed, with grant values in the case of SPUR. For LINK and advanced technology programmes the names of programmes are given, together with the value of grant offers made by financial year. For EUREKA, DTI-funded projects are listed—the "EUREKA year" begins in June.

The values of DTI grant offers made for each scheme are as follows:

Technology Transfer

Dr. Moonie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what responsibilities his Department has for the promotion of technology transfer from the public sector research base into industry.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 1 December 1992]: As part of improving the competitiveness of United Kingdom industry the Department of Trade and Industry seeks to optimise the benefits to industry of work carried out in the science base. Technology transfer is an important aspect of this process.

The Department of Trade and Industry encourages technology transfer by offering direct help through a range of generic technology transfer programmes, for example, in biotechnology and information technology and also by improving education/industry links, for example, the teaching company scheme. Overall, the Department spends some £100 million per year in support of technology transfer.

Parcelforce

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ensure that after the privatisation of Parcelforce a uniform tariff will be maintained.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 1 December 1992]: In the statement by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to the House on 15 July, Official Report, column 1137, of his intention to privatise Parcelforce, he stated that an essential requirement for the Government would be a continued universal parcel service at a uniform and affordable tariff. This remains the case.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 3 December 1992

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Guildford and Woolwich Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General what public interest immunity certificates he has signed in relation to documents provided by his Department for Sir John May's inquiry.

The Attorney-General: None.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General what documents the Law Officers have supplied to Sir John May's inquiry into the Guildford Four convictions; and on what terms.

The Attorney-General: The Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers provided Sir John May with complete copies of the files relating to the prosecution of the Guildford Four and the Maguires. In addition, his inquiry was provided with a number of files relating to other cases arising at about the same time as the matters under consideration by Sir John May where decisions were taken whether to authorise proceedings under the Explosive Substances Act 1883.

These documents were supplied to Sir John on a confidential basis and with an understanding that he would discuss with us any question of their further use which might arise in the course of his inquiry.

TRANSPORT

West Coast Main Line

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for recognising wider social benefits and making provision for through ticketing when financing new rail infrastructure, with particular regard to the west coast main line.

Mr. Freeman: Under our privatisation proposals, ownership of the railway infrastructure will pass to Railtrack, a public sector track authority. Investment in infrastructure will largely be financed from charges to operators but, as stated in the White Paper "New Opportunities for the Railways", the Government may provide direct support for investment schemes not earning an adequate financial return but which have satisfactory cost-benefit returns when wider social and economic benefits are taken into account. No proposals for major investment in the west coast main line have been submitted to the Secretary of State. We have given a clear commitment in the White Paper to preserve through ticketing arrangements across the network.

M25 (Junctions 12 and 15)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many letters his Department has received commenting on his proposals to enlarge the M25 between junctions 12 and 15; and how many of these supported the proposals.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In total, 2,691 letters, some copied to other Ministers, and 7,405 pre-printed postcards have been received specifically commenting on the link road proposals between junctions 12 and 15 of the M25. A number of other letters have also been received raising wider M25 issues. Eight letters in support of the link road proposals have been received.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the alternative routes considered when he was preparing his proposals to enlarge the M25 between junctions 12 and 15.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I am arranging for the list to be placed in the House Libraries.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a list of those organisations that have submitted comments on his proposals to enlarge the M25 between junctions 12 and 15.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A range of possible measures to improve the M25 was outlined in a report by consultants, Rendel, Palmer and Tritton, published in July 1989. This was followed by the M25 action plan published in December 1990 which announced plans to deal with congestion on the M25 and to improve the operation of the motorway. More recently, a review report and a technical appraisal report outlining alternative options for providing additional capacity between junctions 12 and 15 of the M25 were placed in the Library.

Chris Green

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what capacity he has invited Chris Green, head of InterCity, to attend the meeting of potential rail operators scheduled for 9 December.

Mr. Freeman: The meeting on 9 December will discuss the procurement of rolling stock following privatisation, particularly through leasing. Those attending are therefore mainly representatives of financial institutions, together with a number of potential franchisees.

British Rail will be represented by the board member for finance, Mr. James Jerram. Mr. Chris Green is not attending.

Rail Freight

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department has about the extent, and the reasons for, the decline in freight on British Rail (a) in the two years preceeding 14 July and (b) since 14 July.

Mr. Freeman: Total tonnage carried by rail fell from 143·1 million tonnes in 1989-90 to 135·8 million tonnes in 1991-92. Factors affecting changes in rail freight are discussed at pages 18 to 20 of the 1991-92 annual report and accounts of the British Railways Board, which is responsible for rail freight in Great Britain.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met representatives of the rail freight group; and what discussions they had on the switch of freight moved by British Rail to road transport.

Mr. Freeman: I last met the rail users group on 19 May 1992. During the discussion we exchanged views on how rail freight could best compete with other modes.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of state for Transport if it remains his policy to encourage a switch of freight from road to rail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: It remains Government policy to encourage a switch of freight from road to rail where this makes commercial sense.

InterCity (Franchising Bids)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider the propriety of serving managers of InterCity, and other senior British Rail executives, being allowed to work with, and facilitate prospective franchises in the negotiation and preparation of franchising bids for InterCity which would involve them as shareholders if successful.

Mr. Freeman: We wish to encourage bids for franchises from the management and employees of BR. The BR Board has issued appropriate guidance to its managers so that potential conflicts of interst can be identified. It will be a concern of the franchising authority to ensure equality of information and treatment for all prospective bidders at each stage of the tendering process for each franchise.

British Rail Executives

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether British Rail executives may be considered for the advertised posts of rail regulator and head of franchising; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We placed no restrictions on the field of application for candidates wishing to be considered for the posts of railway regulator or passenger railway franchising authority. British Rail employees, like any others, were free to apply. The public advertisement for the posts said that railway or public transport experience would be an advantage, though not essential; and it was one of several criteria on which we have been considering candidates.

Advanced Channel Express Ltd.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the operational conditions, in respect of catamarans operated by Advanced Channel Express Ltd, which his surveyor has identified as not currently meeting specified standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The operational conditions for all high-speed craft are set out in a permit to operate, issued in accordance with a safety code developed by the International Maritime Organisation. The owners of the catamaran are aware of this, having been advised that the Department will have to be satisfied that the craft is suitable for the intended service.

Catamaran Safety

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review all aspects of catamaran safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The United Kingdom has requested a formal review of the International Maritime Organisation safety code for high-speed craft. The United Kingdom is at the forefront of that review which will include all aspects of catamaran safety and is expected to be completed next year.

HGV Operators' Licences

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to change the regulations that prevent a regional centre processing applications for heavy goods vehicle operators' licences from accepting objections from neighbouring regions.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There is nothing to prevent an owner or occupier making representations against the proposed use of a goods vehicle operating centre which is the subject of an application before a licensing authority, in circumstances where the operating centre and the owner or occupier's property are in different traffic areas. The only criteria are that the representor's property must be shown to be adversely affected and that it falls within what the licensing authority determines to be the vicinity of the operating centre in question.

Traffic Congestion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has made of the cost per annum of traffic congestion to (a) the Exchequer, (b) businesses and (c) the average household; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Congestion is costly, but the cost can be measured usefully only against realistic alternatives such as more or less road building or policies for reducing or redirecting traffic. There is therefore no single figure which can be quoted. Much of the Department's roads and traffic expenditure and policies are, however, concerned with reducing congestion and making the best possible use of available road space.

Bus Companies (Future)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will be meeting the chairman of the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority to discuss the authority's reaction to his announcement on 23 November about the future of local authority-owned bus companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have written to the chairman of the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority on behalf of my right hon. Friend agreeing to meet him to discuss the division of Greater Manchester Buses.

ENVIRONMENT

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the health and safety policy of each of the agencies within his Department.

Mr. Howard: The Building Research Establishment, the planning inspectorate and the Queen Elizabeth conference centre all come under my Department's health and safety policy statement and I have placed a copy of the document in the Library.

I have asked Professor David Rhind to place in the Library a copy of his health and safety policy for the Ordnance Survey, and Mr. Roger Powell for the Buying Agency.

Municipal Waste

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he will give of the relative average net costs per tonne of disposal of municipal waste based upon projects handling 250,000 tonnes per year comparing landfill via road at a distance of 100 km and waste-to-energy incineration based on a rate of interest of 20 per cent. over 20 years showing the costs per tonne for incineration both with and without non-fossil fuel obligation subsidy.

Mr. Maclean: The wide range of factors involved and the price variations that exist across the country make it very difficult to give general estimates for the cost of waste disposal. Recent work carried out for the Department suggests that the current disposal costs for waste destined for disposal to landfill vary from between £7·50 to £22·50 per tonne. These costs are likely to increase substantially over the next few years as the Government's improved waste management arrangements are brought into effect. Waste to energy incineration costs are thought to be about £20 to £25 per tonne at present. Without the non-fossil fuel obligation, these are thought likely to be nearer £30 to £35 per tonne. These prices are not expected to change significantly over the next few years.

Timber

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in meeting the requirements of CITES, he intends to make changes to the system of monitoring timber imported into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: We have already made the changes necessary to meet the latest CITES requirements.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what labelling of timber species listed in the appendices of CITES is required prior to entry into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: CITES-listed timber imported into the United Kingdom is not required to be labelled. It must, however, be accompanied by appropriate export and import permits identifying the species in each consignment. The Government are currently supporting schemes to develop effective labelling systems in producer countries.

Water

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet the chairmen of the regional water companies; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Maclean: Ministers have had a number of meetings in recent months with the chairman of British Waterways at which, among other things, matters of strategic policy and board appointments have been discussed. But the Secretary of State has at present no plans to meet him.

Research

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much funding was made available by Her Majesty's Government to fund research outside Government Departments on international environmental policy issues in the financial year 1991-92; and what expenditure is proposed for 1992-93.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not readily available in the form requested and could be assembled only at disproportionate cost. However, the Cabinet Office annual review of Government-funded research and development gives a useful overview of the substantial research efforts devoted to diverse and important international policy issues across Government. In addition, considerable proportions of United Kingdom subscriptions to international bodies are devoted to relevant research.

Clean Air Grant

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the clean air grant will continue to be available to local authorities in England and Wales after 1 April 1993; what economic instruments will be made available to local authorities wishing to improve local air quality; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The future of the clean air grant is under review, but the grant will certainly continue to be available to local authorities in 1993-94. Supplementary credit approval will also be available to local authorities in 1993-94 to assist the financing of their capital expenditure on smoke control which is not covered by clean air grant.

Sulphur Dioxide

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in which month he expects the United Kingdom to meet the large combustion plant directive target of a 20 per cent. reduction in sulphur dioxide emissions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The directive requires the United Kingdom's total emissions of sulphur dioxide from our existing large combustion plants in 1993 to be at least 20 per cent. below those in 1980. Emissions from such plant in 1991, the latest available year, were 71 per cent. of the 1980 figure.

Urban Programme (Rochdale)

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many urban programme proposals in the Rochdale metropolitan borough council were funded in 1992-93; and how many are likely to be funded in 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire: In 1992-93, 102 proposals received urban programme funding. In 1993-94, it is likely that 34 proposals will receive funding.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) of 27 October, Official Report, column 549 what steps he intends to take to implement the EC regulations agreed on the supervision and control of shipments of toxic waste; and when he will publish the regulations;

(2) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) of 27 October, Official Report, column 543, on control of shipments of toxic waste in the European Community, if he will make it his policy in implementing the proposals to ensure that toxic waste is disposed of as close as possible to its source within the United Kingdom and that no waste is imported for commercial gain.

Mr. Maclean: The regulation will be published in the Official Journal after adoption by the Council and is likely to apply 15 months after publication. We shall be giving careful consideration to the application of the regulation's provisions in relation to imports for final disposal. We expect no change as result of the regulation to existing practice within the United Kingdom.

Waste Incinerators

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what criteria he will adopt regarding stack emissions for waste incinerators approved by him;

(2) what level of emission of dioxins, furans and polychlorinated biphenyls he regards as (a) safe and (b) acceptable from waste incinerators;

(3) what criteria he will adopt regarding stack emissions for waste-to-energy incinerators approved by him;

(4) what level of emission of dioxins, furans and polychlorinated biphenyls he regards as (a) safe and (b) acceptable from waste-to-energy incinerators.

Mr. Maclean: Prime responsibility for the control of stack emissions from incinerators rests with the appropriate enforcing authority under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990; either Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution or the relevant district or borough council. Several guidance notes have been published by the Secretary of State and by the chief inspector, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution concerning emission control standards for incinerators.

In granting authorisations, the regulating body will have regard to the advice contained in the relevant guidance note. These notes provide guidance on the techniques considered to be appropriate to meet the requirement to use the best available techniques not entailing excessive cost to either prevent the release of prescribed substances or, where that is not practicable, to minimise such releases and to render them harmless. They also provide guidance on the levels of releases achievable using these techniques. For dioxins these are set as release limits which accord with the best international safety standards. To facilitate the complete destruction of a wide range of toxic substances, including PCBs, the requirement is to ensure that the gases resulting from the combustion of the waste are raised to a sufficiently high temperature for a minimum time period.

Copies of all guidance notes have been placed in the House Library.

Housing Conditions Survey

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the last survey of housing conditions was made; and if he will publish the result of the survey.

Mr. Baldry: The latest national survey of housing conditions was begun in September 1991 and completed in October this year. Results from the survey will be published next year.

Standard Spending Assessments (London)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the highest, lowest and next lowest standard spending assessment elements for inner London boroughs for (a) other services, (b) child social services and (c) education expressed for each relevant person.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested, in respect of the provisional standard spending assessments, is shown in the table below. The education SSA has been expressed in £s per head since this SSA covers services provided across the full age range.

Table showing provisional 1993-94 SSAs by selected inner London boroughs (excludes the City of London)

Service	Relative Position	Authority	SSA per head or per child
All Other Services	Highest SSA	Westminster	£562 per head
	Lowest SSA	Greenwich	£191 per head
	Next Lowest SSA	Lewisham	£233 per head
Child Social Services	Highest SSA	Lambeth	£880 per child
	Lowest SSA	Greenwich	£311 per child
	Next Lowest SSA	Lewisham	£461 per child
Education Services	Highest SSA	Tower Hamlets	£700 per head
	Lowest SSA	Kensington	£236 per head
	Next Lowest SSA	Westminster	£275 per head

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in which inner-London boroughs standard spending assessments are below £950 a head; and which are above.

Mr. Robin Squire: Within the provisional standard spending assessments for 1993-94 announced on 26 November, the SSA per head for Greenwich is £929. That for all other inner London boroughs is above £950 per head.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what standard spending assessments would be allocated to Greenwich if it was the same for each person as the assessment for (a) Wandsworth and (b) Lewisham.

Mr. Robin Squire: Combining the SSA per head for Wandsworth and for Lewisham with the latest resident population figure for Greenwich would produce SSA totals of £300 million and £296 million respectively. SSAs are intended to reflect the social characteristics of the area concerned. Greenwich's SSA is different from that of Wandsworth and Lewisham because, inter alia, its social characteristics are different.

Mr. Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the effects on the standard spending assessments for Greenwich of (a) population change and (b) the factors II (i) to (vi) in his Department's letter of 26 November to local authorities on local government finance (England).

Mr. Robin Squire: No such estimates have been made.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the significant factors other than population affecting standard spending assessments and what effect each contributed to the difference between the standard spending assessments of Greenwich and Wandsworth.

Mr. Robin Squire: All the factors on which standard spending assessments are based are listed in the draft Local Government Finance Report (England) 1993-94 which is in the Library. These are very similar to those used for 1992-93. The SSA Handbook for 1992-93, which is in the Library, shows the contribution of the main indicators to each authority's SSA in £ per adult. Similar calculations have not been carried out for provisional 1993-94 SSAs.

Air Pollution

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state for each air pollutant monitored by his Department at what levels the Department classifies the pollution as good, average and below average; if he will list the guidelines or standards advised by the World Health Organisation in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: For the purposes of the air quality bulletins issued by the Department to the media for public consumption, the quality of air, based on measured concentrations of ozone, nitrogen dioxide and sulphur dioxide, is divided into four categories: very good, good, poor and very poor. The bandings are as follows:

Department of Environment guidelines (parts per billion/1 hour)

	Very good	Good	Poor	Very poor
OZONE	< 50	50-89	90-179	> = 180

Environmental Health Regulations

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the environmental health regulations he is considering for modification or abolition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My Department is currently reviewing the Environmental Protection (Prescribed Processes and Substances) Regulations 1991, which prescribe the processes to be controlled by local authorities under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

We have received representations about the enforcement of legislation concerning houses in multiple occupation and common lodging houses and these are being considered.

Following a review of the house renovation grant system for private sector properties a number of changes have been proposed. These include amendments to:—

— the Housing Renovation etc. Grants (Reduction of Grant) Regulations 1990;
— the Housing Renovation etc. Grants (Prescribed Forms and Particulars) Regulations 1990; — assistance for Minor Works to Dwellings Regulations 1990.

Planning Applications

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of whether local authorities considering planning applications that will have a direct effect on a neighbouring authority pay sufficient care and attention to the needs, costs and infrastructure of that neighbouring authority.

Mr. Baldry: Planning authorities are required to keep under review all matters that are expected to affect the planning of development in their area, and to take account, in consultation with the authorities concerned, of the effects for their areas of similar matters in neighbouring areas. In preparing development plans, all local planning authorities are required to consult the planning authorities for areas adjacent to the area covered by their plan proposals, and to take into account any representations made. We advise them to consult other authorities likely to be affected.

Planning applications must be decided in accordance with the development plan unless material considerations indicate otherwise. A local planning authority is required by article 18 of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 to consult the neighbouring planning authority about any application which affects land in its area.

Darwin Initiative

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his oral answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 862, if he will make a further statement on the Darwin initiative in the light of the autumn statement.

Mr. Maclean: Subject to parliamentary approval, funding for projects which meet the objectives of the Darwin initiative will be £1 million for 1993-94, £2 million for 1994-95 and £3 million for 1995-96. We will be consulting widely on the priorities and programmes for the initiative. I am establishing a small advisory committee to consider the responses to that consultation. I am pleased to say that Sir Crispin Tickell has agreed to chair it.

Caravan Sites

Mr. Malone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the responses to the consultation paper on reform of the Caravan Sites Act 1968; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Copies of the responses to the consultation paper, "Reform of the Caravan Sites Act 1968", will be placed in the Department's library shortly, and a list of the responses will be placed in the House of Commons Library. We are now considering over 1,200 responses we have received so far. We will make an announcement about the way forward in due course.

Industrial Processes (Controls)

Mr. Gawler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the risks to the global environment arising from the transfer of industrial processes from the United Kingdom and other countries with strict environmental legislation to countries with poor or non-existent controls.

Mr. Maclean: The main risks to the global environment from industrial processes are from those which contribute to global warming and through the release of ozone depleting substances. The Government are committed to pursuing multilateral solutions to these problems.

This year over 150 countries including the United Kingdom signed the United Nations framework convention on climate change. All partners will be committed to producing national programmes of measures to limit greenhouse gas emissions.

The Montreal protocol provides controls on the production and consumption of ozone depleting substances and trade in them. At a recent meeting of the parties to the protocol it was agreed that CFC's should be phased out by the end of 1995 and halons by the end of 1993.

EC Environmental Standards

Mr. Gawler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the consistency of the application through the Community of EC environmental standards affecting the operations of manufacturing industry.

Mr. Maclean: Ensuring consistent application of legislation throughout the EC is, in the first instance, a matter for the Commission. One of the priorities of our presidency has been to highlight the importance of consistent and effective implementation and enforcement of EC environmental legislation. To this end, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has, during our presidency, hosted the first meeting of a network of EC environmental regulatory authorities. Separately we are encouraging the Commission to bring forward proposals for an audit inspectorate to inspect the work of national enforcement agencies.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Gawler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration is being given by his Department to the effect on United Kingdom industry's competitiveness of failure of overseas governments to enforce measures to protect the national and global environment; and if he will support the introduction of agreed and enforced environmental standards on an international basis.

Mr. Maclean: The relationship between industrial competitiveness and environmental protection was the subject of a resolution agreed by the EC Council of Industry Ministers on 24 November, and of a communication from the Commission to that Council.

High environmental standards can increase the competitiveness of industry, as well as providing major new market opportunities. However, where necessary to reduce poor standards overseas undermining the competitiveness of certain sectors of United Kingdom industry, we would support action on an international basis.

Empty Council Property

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of dwellings which have been empty for more than six months for each London borough and the percentage which empty properties constitute of each council's housing stock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The latest information reported by the London boroughs in their annual housing investment programme (HIP1) returns relates to April 1992 and is as follows:—

Council Rent Arrears

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the rent arrears for each London borough and indicate the percentage arrears constitute of each council's rent revenue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 2 July 1992 at column 675 to the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson), which included the latest figures, relating to the end of March 1991.

Community Charge Arrears

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the community charge arrears for each London borough and indicate the percentage which arrears constitute of each council's community charge income; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to my answer given on 5 November at columns 370-71 to the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones).

Councillors (Travel Allowances)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if local authority councillors are permitted to claim travelling allowances in connection with their official duties in respect of travel by bicycle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The provisions governing the payment of travelling allowances to councillors do not currently permit the payment of a bicycle allowance.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any termination payments will be made to members ceasing to be members of the London residuary body in January 1993.

Mr. Robin Squire: No.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make any new appointments or re-appointments to the board of the London residuary body in 1993.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is the intention of my right hon. and learned Friend to reappoint Mr. Wallace Mackenzie, Mr. Michael Roberts and Mr. Jack Wolkind as members of the London residuary body when their present terms expire on 31 March 1993. Sir Godfrey Taylor was reappointed as chairman on 1 December this year.

Battersea Power Station

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 20 November, Official Report, column 426, if he will state the main points made by English Heritage following the inspection of Battersea power station on 7 October.

Mr. Baldry: Following its inspection on 7 October, English Heritage concluded that there had been no significant deterioration of the structure since work stopped. The external brick clad structure is adequately supported where necessary by the temporary steelwork. There has been some ingress of water into the control room due to failure of temporary waterproofing where a small section of the superstructure was removed. A temporary felt roof is to be provided shortly.

Water Quality

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to introduce statutory water quality objectives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have today published a consultation paper on river quality. This sets out the Government's proposals for safeguarding our rivers, including the introduction of statutory water quality objectives (WQOs) gradually from 1993, and initially for a limited number of objectives in order to test the new system. The paper proposes a new classification scheme as the framework within which individual WQOs would be set; and a revised basis for carrying out the regular overall assessments of river quality. The proposals are based on recommendations published by the National Rivers Authority in October, following wide consultation. I am grateful for the authority's work which underpins our proposals.

Our strategy builds on the major programmes of water investment which are already planned or under way and takes account of the implications for consumers. We have set out proposals for maintaining river quality, for reversing recent deteriorations, and for targeting further resources on those improvements which can be achieved most quickly and cost-effectively. This represents a firm foundation for introducing WQOs.

As discussed in "Using Water Wisely" last July and "This Common Inheritance: the Second Year Report" in October, I am developing proposals for water pollution charging which I believe can play a role as an alternative to further regulatory action as a way of achieving WQOs.

I have placed copies of our paper in the Library of the House.

Council House Sales

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number and value of council house sales by region for each of the last 16 quarters (a) at current prices and (b) at 1981 prices.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 30 November 1990]: Information on sales in the period July 1988 to June 1992 is given in the table. The figures exclude dwellings transferred to housing associations and other registered bodies in large scale voluntary transfers. Such transfers accounted for some 94,000 dwellings valued at about £800 million during this period.

Fire and Civil Defence Authorities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the standard spending assessment element for fire and civil defence for each county council and metropolitan fire and civil defence authority in England in each year since 1983-84; and what are the figures for 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 1 December 1992]: Standard spending assessments were first introduced for the settlement year 1990-91 as a replacement for grant related expenditure assessments. The SSA elements for fire and civil defence for each county council and metropolitan fire and civil defence authority in England are shown in table 2 of the SSA handbooks for 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93, all of which are in the Library. The provisional figures for 1993-94 are given in the table.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the actual expenditure on fire and civil defence services by each county council and metropolitan fire and civil defence authority in England for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 1 December 1992]: I have arranged for the information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning appeals for opencast coal sites his office has dealt with in each year since 1983-84 and from 1 April to 30 September 1992; how many were approved and refused each year; what extent of land and volume of coal were approved and disapproved each year; how many appeals are outstanding; and what extent of land and volume of coal these involve.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 1 December 1992]: Information on planning appeals involving opencast coal extraction between 1983-84 and 1986-87 is not available. The outcome of appeals determined between 1987-88 and 30 September is given in the table.

Planning appeal decisions for opencast coal sites

	Appeals decided	Appeals allowed	Appeals dismissed
1987-88	15	7	8

1991-92	8	7	1
To 30 September 1992	5	3	2

At 30 November 1992 there are 14 appeals involving opencast coal extraction before the Secretary of State.

Information on the extent of land and the volume of coal approved and disapproved is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

British Waterways

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Waterways; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Maclean: Ministers have had a number of meetings in recent months with the chairman of British Waterways, at which among other things matters of strategic policy and board appointments have been discussed. But the Secretary of State has at present no plans to meet him.

Multilateral Fund

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution Her Majesty's Government has made to the interim multilateral fund to assist the developing nations to phase out CFCs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply. We have paid the equivalent of US$3·443 million to the interim fund which meets the United Kingdom's full share of approved projects and support costs up to June 1992. We are firmly committed to providing the remainder of our share of the US$240 million fund.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current value to the Legal Aid Board, at 1992 prices, of those statutory charges placed on homes as a consequence of civil legal aid proceedings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: As at 31 March 1992—which is the most recent date for which a total figure is available—the value to the Legal Aid Board of charges placed on property as a consequence of civil legal aid proceedings was £86 million.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the changes in civil legal aid eligibility on (a) the numbers who will take legal action and (b) the access to legal representation and its quality of those client groups no longer financially eligible for legal aid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I estimate that the number of civil legal aid bills paid will rise from around 298,000 in 1992-93 to around 327,000 in 1995-96. Legal services for those outside the legal aid scheme will continue to be available from lawyers in private practice and from other sources.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what consultations he has had with (a) the Law Society and (b) the Law Centres Federation concerning the impact of changes in the legal aid system on the numbers eligible for legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department regularly discusses a range of issues relating to legal aid with both the Law Society and the Law Centres Federation. I am always open to receive representations on any matter.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the impact of his amended eligibility criteria for legal aid on applications for legal advice under the green form scheme and private medical examinations for appellants against refusal of invalidity care allowance, attendance allowance, mobility allowance and disability living allowance.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The changes announced on 12 November do not affect the type of work that can be done under the green form scheme. Those people receiving income support or with incomes at income support level will be unaffected by the changes. This will mean that around 21 per cent. of households will be eligible for advice under the green form scheme. People with incomes above income support level will in future be unable to receive help under the green form scheme. However, the average green form bill in the last financial year was £82 and it is not unreasonable to expect them to meet costs of this order.

Guildford Four

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what public interest immunity certificates he has signed in relation to documents provided by his Department to Sir John May's inquiry.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None.

Privity of Contract

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans the Government have to reform the law on the privity of contract principle.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor is actively considering the recommendations of the Law Commission on this subject—"Landlord and Tenant Law: Privity of Contract and Estate"—Law Com. No. 74—and hopes to be able to make an announcement about it in the near future.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will carry out a survey into how many tenants are estimated to be facing bills for back rent because of default by their successors to whom they had assigned leases.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has no plans to carry out such a survey, but he takes careful note of the representations he receives from former tenants and from landlords in relation to the operation of the doctrine of privity of contract.

WALES

Sheltered Housing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the funding of the warden service in sheltered housing after 1994; and what is his estimate of the number of wardens employed by health and social services authorities in sheltered housing.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A Court of Appeal judgment cast doubt on housing authorities' powers to provide care services and charge their costs to the housing revenue account. To avoid the risk of disruption to these important services, the Government are seeking powers in the Housing and Urban Development Bill to regularise housing authorities' practices in connection with these services.

The Government's policy is that the housing revenue account should be a landlord account. We therefore propose that these new powers would be temporary. However, before any decisions are taken about the timing of any change in the arrangements, about how the services would be provided thereafter, or about how their costs would be accounted for, there will be full consultation with all parties in the new year. When considering how best to implement any new arrangements, we shall consider all the financial and administrative issues to ensure that support continues to be available for those who need it. Information on the number of wardens in local authority sheltered accommodation is not held centrally.

Training Schemes

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many young people in south Glamorgan are currently on waiting lists for youth training schemes.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information is not available in the form requested.

However, as at 12 November 1992, of the number of young people in south Glamorgan registered for employment or training with the careers service, 228 were reported to be seeking entry or re-entry to youth training. This figure includes young people still receiving guidance as well as those already under submission to training schemes.

St. Mary's Hospital, South Glamorgan

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what requirements he has imposed on South Glamorgan health authority and Llandough hospital unit for public consultation before any plan to close St. Mary's day hospital is implemented.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Welsh Office guidance requires health authorities to discuss service changes with community health councils, prior to taking a view on whether those changes are substantial and therefore subject to formal consultation procedures.

Pit Closures

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 16 November, Official Report, column 91, if the Mid Glamorgan, West Wales and Clwyd training and enterprise councils have completed their action plans for local job creation in the areas affected by the Taff Merthyr, Betws and Point of Ayr collieries; if he has considered their contents; if he will place a copy of each plan and any written response he has made to them in the Library; and if the £4·8 million he has allocated for employment and training in these areas is drawn from the £75 million allocated for this purpose by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Mr. David Hunt: The Mid Glamorgan, West Wales and North East Wales TECs have now submitted action plans proposing initiatives which could be taken in their respective areas. These plans are currently being finalised in discussion with my officials and I will announce my proposals as soon as possible.

Of the allocation of £4·8 million which I have already announced, £2·8 million is included in the £75 million announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 30 November to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West, relating to the auditing arrangements of the Cardiff Bay development corporation, on what date he expects to complete the amendment to the financial memorandum; and if he will place a copy of the amendment in the Library.

Mr. David Hunt: My officials wrote to the corporation yesterday with the amendment to the financial memorandum. I have placed a copy of the letter in the Library of the House.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Performance-related Pay

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff in the Treasury at principal grade and above are in receipt of performance-related pay by grade; and what is the total cost of performance-related pay for these grades in the Treasury.

Mr. Nelson: In total some 116 people at grade 7—principal—and above are in receipt of performance-related pay. The total cost of performance-related pay for these grades in 1992-93 is estimated at £270,000. The numbers of staff in each grade are as follows:

	Numbers
Grade 7 (principal)	47
Grade 6	8
Grade 5	30
Grade 4	2
Grade 3	23
Grade 2	6
	116

Chancellor's Tenant

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the accounting officer appointed under section 22 of the Exchequer and Audit Departments Act 1866 minuted the Comptroller and Auditor General about the expenditure arising in connection with the eviction of a tenant renting property from the Chancellor of the Exchequer; and if he will name the relevant accounting officer.

Mr. Portillo: No minute was sent to the Comptroller and Auditor General. The relevant accounting officers were Sir Peter Middleton and Sir Terence Burns, who succeeded him on 3 May 1991.

Football Grounds

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to confirm his decision to extend the life of the pool betting duty relief announced in the 1990 Budget to provide funds to assist with the implementation of the Taylor report at football grounds.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor will decide whether to extend the reduction in pool betting duty in the light of evidence from the Football League and football clubs that they have moved ahead with planning their own contribution to implementing the Taylor recommendations.

Corporation Tax

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the tax regime applicable to the payment of corporation tax on income accrued as a result of superannuation contribution holidays; and whether any differences exist with respect to the treatment of nationalised industries.

Mr. Dorrell: Companies can obtain a deduction from taxable profits only for superannuation contributions actually paid. This applies equally to nationalised industries as well as the private sector.

Independent Forecasters

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to announce the appointment of a team of independent forecasters to assist the Treasury; and if he will name the individuals he has approached to date.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 1 December 1992]: It is planned to issue invitations to join the forecasting panel in the next few weeks. An announcement about the panel's membership will follow shortly afterwards.

Empty Properties

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the £750 million allocated in the autumn statement for buying empty and repossessed properties will be allocated to London local authorities.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 1 December 1992]: Of the total £750 million allocated to boost the housing market in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, £580 million was allocated to the Housing Corporation to enable housing associations in England to purchase empty properties. Seventy-five per cent. of this £580 million has already been allocated to individual associations. Of this 75 per cent., half—around £220 million—has been allocated to projects in the Housing Corporation's three London and home counties regions.

PRIME MINISTER

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Hain: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement about the affidavit sent to him by Ms. Tess Lawrence on 30 November.

The Prime Minister: The affidavit has been sent by Ms. Lawrence to Lord Justice Scott. It will be for him to consider the information which it contains.

Legal Advice (Ministers)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions since 1979 the Government have funded, wholly or in part, the cost of legal advice of representations for Ministers of the Crown in respect of matters which related in part to personal and private matters; and if he will list the names of the Ministers in respect of whom such payments have been made.

The Prime Minister: There is no central record of such cases. Such advice is normally confidential.

Sprinkler Systems

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy that sprinkler systems similar to those to be installed at the National Library of Scotland should be installed at the British museum in London.

The Prime Minister: It is for the trustees and directing staff of individual museums and galleries to decide on the most appropriate fire systems for their institutions with regard to the nature of their collections.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister on what date the Government received copies of the report prepared by the International Atomic Energy Agency into the attempt by Iraq to build and develop nuclear weapons.

The Prime Minister: So far, the International Atomic Energy Agency has carried out 15 inspections aimed at uncovering Iraqi attempts to build and develop nuclear weapons. As reports of these inspections are published as Security Council documents, they are placed in the House of Commons Library.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 3 December.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 3 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many civil servants are employed by the Northern Ireland Office in (a) London, (b) Belfast and (c) elsewhere.

Mr. Mates: As at 1 November 1992, the number of people working for the Northern Ireland Office was:

(a) 110 in London
(b) 2,813 in Belfast and
(c) 2,870 elsewhere.

Terrorism

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library a comprehensive list of all those who have died as a result of Northerrn Ireland terrorism, including the date and location of their death and of the incident leading to their death and the organisation allegedly responsible for the death since August 1968 in (a) Northern Ireland, (b) Great Britain, (c) the Republic of Ireland and (d) other EC countries.

Mr. Mates: I will write to the hon. Gentleman when compilation of the available information is completed and arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Wildlife

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he or his officials last met representatives of the agrochemical industry to discuss the future funding of the wildlife incident investigation schemes.

Mr. Hanley: Wildlife incident investigation schemes operate on a common basis throughout the United Kingdom. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food takes the lead in negotiations with the agrochemical industry, and I understand that it has recently met with industry representatives to discuss the funding of the scheme.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future funding of the wildlife incident investigation scheme Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Wildlife incident investigation schemes operate on a common basis throughout the United Kingdom with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food the lead Department as far as their operation is concerned.

Laganside Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 26 November, Official Report, column 789, relating to the auditing arrangements of the Laganside Corporation, on what date he expects to complete the amended financial memorandum; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Atkins: Laganside Corporation was advised by letter dated 1 December 1992 of the amendment to the financial memorandum. The amended section now reads:

"The Northern Ireland Audit Office shall have full access on request to the books and records of the Corporation."

I am arranging for a copy of the memorandum to be placed in the Library.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Bangladesh

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about aid to Bangladesh.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Britain provided £56 million in aid to Bangladesh in 1991. Our aid programme supports development of the country's natural resources, its physical infrastructure and its human resources through health and population, education and training. We promote good government through our assistance with economic reform, and improvements to the efficiency and accountability of public services. We have established a new aid management office in Dhaka, staffed by a multi-disciplinary team, which will allow us to focus our aid still more effectively on Bangladesh's development priorities.

Global Environment Facility

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to provide additional resources for replenishment of the global environment facility; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government have agreed to provide new and additional resources for the replenishment of the global environment facility. Provision for this will be made following the outcome of the replenishment negotiations and as soon as the level and the timing of our contribution is known.

Malawi

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British aid to Malawi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: At the Consultative Group in May 1992, we and other donors agreed to withhold new balance of payments and restrict other forms of aid, pending improvements in Malawi's human rights record. We welcome the decision to hold a referendum on the one-party system and other indications that the Malawi Government are beginning to address human rights issues. It is essential that the referendum is conducted fairly and those calling for democratic changes are allowed to campaign freely and openly. We continue to urge the Malawi Government to make further improvements in human rights.

We keep our position on aid under regular review, but for the moment we are concentrating new aid on humanitarian relief and projects to help the poorest. So far this year we have allocated £12·3 million of humanitarian relief, including £0·5 million of medical supplies offered during November.

Tropical Forests

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest information on the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisation's estimates on rates of tropical forest loss.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Preliminary estimates from the current 1990 FAO forest resources assessment indicate a rate of tropical forest loss in excess of 17 million hectares annually.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure implementation of the forest principles agreed at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We shall publish a national plan on our own implementation of the forest principles, by the end of 1993. We are also using our influence, together with our EC and G7 partners, to seek agreement to an international review process. We believe that this should involve the Sustainable Development Commission which is being established by the United Nations General Assembly.

Grenada

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the environmental impacts of the Commonwealth Development Corporation/Liberty Club Ltd. tourist hotel development in Grenada.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It is the Government's responsibility under the Commonwealth Development Corporation Act to set the policy framework in which the Commonwealth Development Corporation carries out its activities. Decisions on individual investments are the responsibility of its board. Assessment of the environmental aspects of proposed investments is an integral part of the Commonwealth Development Corporation's project appraisal and approval procedures. In these circumstances, it would not be appropriate for the Overseas Development Administration to undertake separate studies of proposed projects.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to authorise the Commonwealth Development Corporation to extend its area of operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Approval has been given to the Commonwealth Development Corporation undertaking activities in the Dominican Republic. In pursuing investment opportunities the Commonwealth Development Corporation will endeavour to give priority to promoting the private sector.

Human Rights

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether applicants for membership of the Commonwealth have to fulfil any standards with regard to democracy or respect for human rights.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding reply 1 December 1992]: All countries applying to join the Commonwealth are expected to adhere to the "Declaration of Commonwealth Principles" issued at the 1971 Singapore Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting.

Cameroon

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has received about the arrest and detention of Dr. Bieleu, president of the Union of Cameroonian Democratic Forces.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 1 December 1992]: We have received a large number of representations about human rights abuses in Cameroon following the Presidential elections on 11 October. Particular concern has been expressed by human rights groups in both the United Kingdom and Cameroon about the detention of opposition leaders, including Dr. Bieuleu, who is currently detained without charge at the headquarters of the Gendarmerie Nationale in Yaoundé. The authorities have also apparently refused Dr. Bieuleu medication to control his diabetes.

We have made our concerns about human rights abuses plain to the Cameroon Government and have called publicly on President Biya to release those in detention, especially leaders of the opposition parties.

World Bank

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the number of staff available to support the United Kingdom executive director of the World bank in his evaluation of the economic poverty alleviation and environmental impact of proposed World bank projects.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 26 November 1992]: The United Kingdom executive director has a joint office dealing with World bank and IMF matters. In addition to two alternate directors, there are six assistants, all of whom have responsibilities for reviewing World bank projects and policies. Technical back-up is available as necessary from professional advisers at the ODA's headquarters.

Malaria Conference

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the conference in Amsterdam on malaria, at which the Department of Health was represented.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 27 November 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

Participants from 102 member states of the World Health Organisation unanimously adopted the world declaration on the control of malaria at the ministerial conference in Amsterdam on 26 to 27 October. Acknowledging that malaria constitutes a major threat to health and to economic development, the conference concluded that malaria can and must be controlled with the tools now available; the key to success is applying the right strategy in the right places at the right time; in most endemic countries the goal will be to prevent malaria mortality and to reduce morbidity as well as social and economic losses due to the disease through building local and national capabilities; and aid donors should increase support for malaria control efforts.

The United Kingdom delegation was led by ODA's chief health and population adviser and included representatives from the Department of Health and the Liverpool and London Schools of Tropical Medicine. The United Kingdom delegation stressed the need for cost-effective interventions to tackle malaria. It noted that ODA already provides substantial support to the management of malaria in many developing countries, and announced ODA's intention to establish a United Kigdom malaria consortium to help developing countries acquire skills needed to develop cost-effective malaria strategies and undertake relevant operational research. Developing countries will be able to apply for such assistance under ODA's bilateral country programmes. We hope that other aid agencies, such as WHO and the World bank, will also draw on this United Kingdom expertise.

United Nations Programmes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much of the United Kingdom contributed financially to (a) the United Nations development programme, (b) the world food programme, (c) the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, (d) UNICEF, (e) the United Nations fund for population activities, (f) the United Nations environment programme and (g) the United Nations disaster relief organisation, in cash and at 1991 prices for each year since 1985.

Mr. Lennox Boyd [holding answer 16 November 1992]: Contributions in cash terms and in 1991 prices were as follows.

EDUCATION

Open University

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if the Open university will be given the extra funds previously indicated for 1993 to enable it to continue to increase its undergraduate student numbers.

Mr. Forman: The baseline funding for the Open university, which is being transferred to the Higher Education Funding Council for England in 1993-94, includes provision for the university to recruit an additional 2,000 undergraduate students in 1993. I understand that the funding council's decision on the university's funding for the period up to 31 July 1993 takes account of these additional students.

Adult Illiteracy

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what measures are being taken to tackle adult illiteracy in England.

Mr. Forman: The Further and Higher Education Act 1992 places the Further Education Funding Council under a duty to secure adequate provision of basic literacy teaching for adults. The Government also support the adult literacy and basic skills unit which provides advice and undertakes development work in basic skills.

Birmingham City Council

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the effect of penalties imposed on council spending which exceeds standard spending assessment on the ability of Birmingham city council to reach its standard spending assessment for education; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Forth: Birmingham city council is responsible for deciding its overall budget and spending priorities and is accountable locally for the decisions it takes.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Legg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the provisions of the treaty of Maastricht which (a) alter the status of the council as an institution of the European Community, (b) increase the scope of majority voting or (c) reduce the right of unilateral action by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 20 May at column 169 detailing extensions of majority voting under the Maastricht treaty. The status of the Council is not altered by the treaty on European union. The United Kingdom would forgo the right to act unilaterally in monetary mattes if it chose to join the move to a single currency, but the treaty does not oblige it to do so. The treaty includes new articles on education, training, culture, health, consumer protection, industry and development which include powers for the Community to act. But measures in all these areas had already been adopted under the existing treaty, so the articles concerned largely make explicit what is already possible under existing provisions. In addition, article 3b of the treaty sets new criteria for Community action across the board, which will limit its right to constrain member states' activities. On balance, therefore, we are confident that member states' freedom of action will be increased.

South-West Atlantic (Fish Stocks)

Mr. Sherwby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions have taken place with the Argentine Government concerning the conservation of fish stocks in the south-west Atlantic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Discussions were held with the Argentine Government at the fourth meeting of the South Atlantic Fisheries Commission on 23 and 24 November 1992. The delegations exchanged views on conservation and related matters. We shall continue the dialogue with the Argentine Government.

Mr. Sherwby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the value of licences to fish for illex squid in Falkland Islands waters in 1992, if he will make an estimate of the projected income for 1993; what information he has concerning investment in fisheries in the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The income from illex squid licences to fish in Falkland Islands waters in 1992 amounted to £20·768 million. The current licensing round is not yet complete and prospective income is uncertain. It could be significantly lower. The market for squid is weak. There may be fewer applications for licences.

Mr. Sherwby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent information he has concerning the depletion of stocks of the illex squid in the waters of the south-west Atlantic; and what is his policy for ensuring that immature squid is protected from overfishing in these waters.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The proportion of the annual illex squid brood which is not caught each season and is thus able to breed has been sufficient to maintain an adequate stock in Falkland Islands waters.

We support the measures taken by the Falkland Islands Government to prevent overfishing by limiting the number of licences for fishing in the Falkland Islands conservation zone (FICZ), closing the fishery early if necessary and negotiating voluntary restraint agreements to prevent overfishing in the adjacent high seas. We discuss with Argentina measures for fisheries conservation in the South Atlantic Fisheries Commission.

Malta

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made with Malta's application for membership of the European Community.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Maltese application has been referred to the European Commission for its Opinion. We look forward to an early discussion by the Council of Ministers when the Opinion is available.

Conventional Forces in Europe Treaty

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current status and recent implementation of the CFE treaty.

Mr. Garel-Jones: An agreement to apply the CFE treaty provisionally from 17 July 1992 was signed by all 29 CFE states parties at the Helsinki summit on 10 July. This was in response to the view of many states parties that implementation of the treaty, which was signed on 19 November 1990, should not be delayed any further by the failure of some states parties to ratify quickly. The treaty entered into force definitively on 9 November, following ratification by the last two states parties, Belarus and Kazakhstan, on 30 October.

In the 120-day period of intensive inspection since 17 July, the United Kingdom has conducted 21 inspections in the countries of the former Warsaw pact, and has received seven inspections from them. On 14 November the treaty moved into its three-year reduction phase, in the course of which states parties will reduce their equipment holdings to the limits specified by the treaty. We are satisfied that the CFE treaty, which we regard as a cornerstone for co-operative security in Europe, has been properly implemented so far.

EC Officials

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 13 November, Official Report, column 1012, how many of the British employees at the European Commission are translators or interpreters; and if he will break down the figure for those in the administrative grade by directorate general.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

There are currently 185 full-time British translators and interpreters working for the European Community institutions. These are additional to the figures for British officials employed in the European Commission in my answer of 13 November, at column 1012. The provision of detailed breakdowns of staffing figures is a matter for the European Community institutions.

Cameroon

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Government have taken at the United Nations or elsewhere about the current political and constitutional position in Cameroon.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A Cameroonian mission, led by Deputy Foreign Minister Mr. Francis Nkwain, visited the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 18 November. We called on the Cameroon Government on this occasion to take all possible measures to end human rights abuses and to take active measures to demonstrate their commitment to democracy. We have subsequently drawn to the attention of the Cameroon Government a British statement issued on 19 November which urged President Biya to end the state of emergency and to release those in detention or under house arrest, especially leaders of the opposition parties.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what investigations he has made into the civil rights position of the SDF candidate for the presidency in Cameroon in respect of human rights; and whether his Department has sought to meet Mr. John Fru Ndi recently.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The continued restriction on Mr. Fru Ndi appear to run counter to Cameroon's obligations under the international convention on civil and political rights. The British ambassador to Cameroon has spoken to Mr. Fru Ndi several times by telephone and a member of the embassy visited the North-West Province on 23-24 November, when he was able to meet him in person.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Government have made about the treatment of the English-speaking Cameroons in recent years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have been given no grounds to make such representations in recent years. The current problems in Cameroon are not solely related to problems between the anglophone and francophone communities in Cameroon, but rather stem from the conduct of the presidential election on 11 October and the increase in human rights abuses in the aftermath of that election.

Tropical Forests

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many species of tropical rain forest timber he considers to be in danger of global extinction as a result of over-harvesting.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

Species threatened with extinction which are, or may be, affected by trade are listed in appendix I of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES). The appendix currently includes two tropical timber species: the Guatemalan Fir, Abies guatemalensis, and Brazilian Rosewood, Dalbergia nigra.

HEALTH

Health Practices

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures are being taken to promote better health practices in England.

Dr. Mawhinney: Over £150 million has been invested since 1989 to support medical and clinical audit. The philosophy of audit is now generally accepted by the medical and other health care professions.

The clinical outcomes group, jointly chaired by the chief medical officer and chief nursing officer and representing all the major professional groups in the national health service, has been set up to drive forward the concept of clinical audit and focus on establishing outcomes.

Other initiatives include:

the "Health of the Nation" which has set targets in the area of awareness and prevention of illness; and a series of bulletins entitled "Effective Health Care", bringing together evidence of the effectiveness of specific health care interventions. Four bulletins have been issued to date:

Population Screening for Osteoporosis
Rehabilitation after Stroke
The Management of Subfertility
Treatment of Persistent Glue Ear in Children

Department of Health funded research programmes which will form the basis of standards for audit in future; encouraging the medical royal colleges to set best practice standards for their specialties.

Vaccines

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to speed up the supply of children's HIB vaccines to district health authorities; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: More than 2 million doses of HIB vaccine have been issued to health authorities since the vaccine was introduced on 1 October. The recommended programme for immunisation, which gives priority to the youngest children because they are at most risk from invasive haemophilus disease, required some 650,000 doses in October and November. This has left a substantial balance to allow for the immunisation of older children who would otherwise be called in at a later stage in the programme. The objective is to immunise all children under four years of age by September 1993.

It is the responsibility of health authorities to arrange equitable distribution of the vaccine they receive, according to requirements, and to make any adjustments to the supply arrangements considered necessary. Continuing supplies of HIB vaccine should ensure that a total of 5 million doses will be distributed in the first six months of the programme.

Family Planning

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for every district health authority in England and number of family planning clinics in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Drugs (Labelling)

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to require drug companies to label drugs with Braille symbols.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no such plans. I understand that the Royal Pharmaceutical Society has had discussions with the industry which is looking at ways of introducing some degree of Braille labelling.

Secure Units (Juveniles)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many places in secure units for juveniles there are in England and Wales; and how many places the Government are intending to provide by 1995.

Mr. Yeo: On 30 November 1992 there were 292 places in local authority secure units in England.

Plans are being prepared to provide an additional 60 to 65 secure places in order to implement the new juvenile remand provisions in the Criminal Justice Act 1991 by the mid 1990s.

The information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current average cost of keeping a juvenile in a local authority secure unit.

Mr. Yeo: Information in the form requested is not collected centrally.

Eyesight and Dental Checks

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make regulations to restore the right to a free eye test and the right to a free dental check-up.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

Social Security Budget

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the adjustment in the amount to be transferred from the social security budget to local authorities from 1 April 1993 in the light of the uprating of benefits announced by the Secretary of State for Social Security on 12 November; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The amounts of the transfer which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 2 October were based on a calculation made at that time of the resources which the Government would otherwise have provided to finance care through social security payments to people in residential and nursing homes. The transfer was calculated on the assumption of an increase in social security benefit levels of 4·25 per cent. In the event the uprating of social security benefits announced on 12 November amounted to 3·6 per cent., but I do not envisage any adjustment being made to the transfer amounts.

Chemical Entity Medicines

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 26 November, Official Report, columns 810-11, if she will name the indigestion remedy, the laxative and the vitamin product that have been granted product licences by the United Kingdom licensing authority since 1985; and what was the recommendation of the NHS Advisory Committee on Drugs in each case.

Dr. Mawhinney: The indigestion remedy is Pepulsid which the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs accepted was appropriate for supply on NHS prescription. The laxative is Importal which the committee decided should not be prescribable under the NHS by its proprietary name, although it can be supplied under the generic name Lactitol. The vitamin is Elcarn which has not been considered by the committee; I understand it may never have been marketed in the United Kingdom.

GPs Fee Scale

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what recommendations the Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body is planning to make on the fee scale for general medical practitioners in 1993-94; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: When my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister informed the chairman of the Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body of its amended remit for the coming year, he invited the review body to make recommendations as normal on a fee scale for general medical practitioners that would make provision for their practice expenses and deliver the new intended average net income set by the Government's policy for public sector pay settlements for the coming year.

The review body expressed some reservations about what this might entail. There have been discussions between my officials, the profession, and the DDRB secretariat, to explore the review body's concerns and to see how far the two sides could offer evidence which might help. A good deal of common ground has emerged, but it is now clear that there remain some issues which it would be difficult for the review body to handle in current circumstances.

The Government have therefore concluded that the best course is not to refer these questions to the review body for the 1993-94 pay round. Instead, the Health Departments will pursue them directly with the profession, to a time scale which should allow further progress on the unresolved technical matters. My officials are in touch with the British Medical Association about the arrangements for these discussions.

Osteopaths

Mr. Welfen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to introduce provisions that osteopaths should be trained to minimum standards of competence and be regulated by a governing body capable of enforcing an appropriate code of practice.

Mr. Sackville: The Government are supporting the private Member's Bill by my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Moss) to establish a single statutory governing body for osteopaths responsible for developing, promoting and regulating the profession of osteopathy and for setting educational standards and standards of professional conduct.

Limited List Prescribing

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has concerning the effectiveness of the limited list prescribing system which is used in each other member country of the European Community which has adopted such a system.

Dr. Mawhinney: I understand that steps have been or are being taken to ensure that the best use is made of resources available for the provision of drugs in a number of member states in the European Community including Germany, France, Italy, Spain and Belgium. We have no information about the extent to which the effectiveness of such schemes has been formally evaluated.

Health-related Projects

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the health-related projects currently funded by (a) city challenge and (b) the urban programme.

Mr. Sackville: City challenge funding commenced in April this year and health-related projects are reflected in the action plans of Manchester, Wolverhampton, Nottingham, Newcastle, Wirral, Lewisham, Middlesbrough and Bradford. Plans include a wide range of health promotion projects and others related to primary care, maternity services, drugs prevention, a well woman clinic, health services for ethnic minorities and for elderly people, and family and community health.

The latest information available centrally under the urban programme is for 1991-92. A list of health-related projects for which details are held centrally has been placed in the Library.

Private Ambulance Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps she has taken in the last 12 months to monitor the activities of companies providing private ambulance services; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what measures she has undertaken to monitor the suitability and qualifications of staff working for private ambulance companies; and if she will make a statement;

(3) what guidelines exist governing the operation of private medical services which offer an emergency response service; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Private ambulance services and their staff are not subject to any specific statute or regulation. It is for the prospective purchasers of private ambulance services to satisfy themselves that operators are competent to provide the required service. Private ambulance services do not respond to emergency 999 calls.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she or her officials have had with Belmont International Air and Road Ambulance in the last 12 months; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Research Units

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list (a) the research units within the NHS funded by her Department, (b) their principal publications in the last four years and (c) any plans for their reorganisation.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department currently supports 13 research units on rolling contracts. In addition, there are 15 research programmes on fixed-term contracts. None of these contracts is currently held with national health service authorities. The units and programmes are largely based in university departments.

Details of research contracts supported over the past four years are contained in the Department of Health "Handbook of Research and Development", an annual publication, which is available in the Library. A list of units' principal publications is not held centrally. The majority of research units on rolling contracts receive funds from a variety of sources, of which the Department is one.

In respect of plans for reorganisation, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on 2 December.

Mentally Disordered Offenders

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her response to the Reed report on mentally disordered offenders.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) on 27 November, at columns 873-74.

Ativan

Mr. Macklalay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what criteria the drug Ativan was originally made available; and what drugs its availability was intended to supersede.

Dr. Mawhinney: Ativan is a proprietary brand of lorazepam, one of the benzodiazepine group of drugs. It was licensed by the licensing authority on the basis of the normal criteria of quality, efficacy and safety. Whether or not a particular drug is intended to supersede another one is not relevant to the licensing procedure.

Under the selected list arrangements, general practitioners are not permitted to prescribe Ativan tablets under the National Health Service, although lorazepam tablets can be prescribed generically.

Extra-contractual Referrals

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to monitor the system of extra-contractual referrals in the NHS; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The level of expenditure on extra-contractual referrals is monitored during the year. There are no plans for additional monitoring.

NHS (Private Investment)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her plans to attract private investment into the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: Measures already announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will increase the scope for using private finance in joint ventures with the national health service to improve and extend services. We aim to ensure that NHS patients will benefit from these new freedoms to the greatest possible extent.

Pay Beds

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing for each regional health authority and for England as a whole (a) the number of NHS pay beds and (b) the total revenue generated from those beds for 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and the projected figures for 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: The information available centrally is given in the table.

Information derivable from 1991-92 annual accounts will be available shortly. Relevant figures are not collected in-year and any estimates for 1992-93 or 1993-94 would consequently be speculative.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to improve the operation of the ambulance service; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Government remain committed to the maintenance of high standards by NHS ambulance services.

The patients charter sets performance standards for ambulance emergency response times. Progress towards the achievement of the Government's target of one paramedic per front-line ambulance by 1996 continues and is generally ahead of schedule.

In London the inquiry established by the South West Thames regional health authority has been asked to identify the lessons to be learned for the operation and management of the London ambulance service against the imperative of delivering service of the required standard.

NHS Services (Contracting-out)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the future of the contracting out of NHS services, in connection with recent European rulings on the transfer of undertakings.

Mr. Sackville: In the national health service market testing has been mandatory for catering, laundry and linen and domestic services since 1983 and a significant amount of work has been put out to commercial contractors. NHS managers have undertaken market testing in some 20 other support services and the NHS is preparing for an enhanced programme of testing as set out in the "Competing for Quality" White Paper.

Contractors and would-be tenderers may have seen confusing reports concerning an amendment to the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations (1981) proposed in the employment legislation now before Parliament.

These regulations provide for the transfer of employees' contracts where an undertaking has transferred to a new employer. It is not true, as reports have suggested, that the amendment which is being made applies the regulations to the public sector for the first time. Nor is it correct to suggest this cuts across the Government's policy to open central and local government services to competition. The Government have always accepted that the regulations cover both the public and private sectors.

However, in every case the crucial consideration in deciding whether the regulations require that existing terms and conditions of employment should be preserved, is whether or not an undertaking is actually being transferred. This test has always applied and will continue to apply.

In the NHS there is a wide spectrum of work and contracting scenarios. Health authorities, trusts and would-be contractors need to consider in each case, whether there is likely to be a transfer of undertaking involved and if in any doubt to take legal advice.

The Bill makes no difference to the likely outcome of such consideration. The only relevant changes that are being made in the Bill are that it will no longer be necessary to show that the undertaking is in the nature of a commercial venture and that it is made clear that property does not have to be transferred for there to be a transfer of an undertaking.

These changes are required to bring the wording into line with the EC acquired rights directive and to clarify its interpretation.

The changes in the Bill do not imply that past cases should have been decided differently because other criteria may have been relevant to those decisions, nor can it be assumed that future cases will be decided differently.

Market testing in the NHS has led to both improvements in quality of service and financial savings thus releasing resources for direct patient care. The NHS is committed to pressing ahead with the challenging programme of market testing for the future.

Hospital Waiting Times

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing for each regional health authority the latest figures on (a) the percentage of patients receiving an immediate assessment in casualty, (b) the percentage of patients whose waiting time has been limited to 30 minutes and (c) the percentage of patients who have experienced the cancellation of a booked operation.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities, as purchasers of services, are required to publish annual reports giving details of the performance against all relevant patients charter rights and standards achieved by their providers. A commentary on overall performance will be included in the chief executive's annual report for 1992-93.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Loan Objects

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the number of indemnity undertakings given by Departments under section 16 of the National Heritage Act 1980 for the six-month period ended 30 September; and what was the value of contingent liabilities in respect of such undertakings given at any time and which remain outstanding as at 30 September.

Mr. Brooke: The information my hon. Friend requests is as follows:

In the six-month period ended 30 September 1992 the following undertakings to indemnify were given by the relevant Departments for items on loan to national and non-national institutions.

	Number
Department of National Heritage	535
Scottish Office Education Department	93
Welsh Office Education Department	38
Department of Education for Northern Ireland	8

The value of contingent liabilities in respect of such undertakings given at any time and outstanding at 30 September 1992 are:

Department of National Heritage	1,303,095,363
Scottish Office Education Department	284,743,138
Welsh Office Education Department	56,733,397
Department of Education for Northern Ireland	2,899,587

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what allocations of items accepted in lieu of tax there have been since his last announcement on 6 November.

Mr. Brooke: Since my last announcement, on 6 November at column 429, I am pleased to inform the House of an allocation of an offer in lieu of tax. The offer is of minutes and accounts relating to the Hambledon cricket club. These documents will be allocated to the Hampshire record office.

Children's Play

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what support he intends to give to children's play after 31 March 1993.

Mr. Brooke: My Department's current funding of the national children's play and recreation unit, through the Sports Council, comes to an end on 31 March 1993. Discussions have now been opened with the Sports Council with a view to its taking over direct responsibility for a number of the play unit's functions.

National Lottery

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what advice he has received on the impact of the proposed national lottery on the football pools if the total percentage taken out in tax and in payments to good causes were identical for pools and national lottery;

(2) what advice he has received on the impact of the proposed national lottery on football pools assuming no changes are made in the current rules governing the pools operation and promotion;

(3) what advice he has received on the impact of the proposed national lottery on football pools if pools were permitted (a) to be promoted to potential clients who want to use lucky numbers rather than skill and judgment in placing their bets, (b) to run roll-over jackpots, (c) to be advertised on television or (d) to have pools coupons collected from shops;

(4) what advice he has received on the consequences for the proposed national lottery's turnover if the lottery were not to offer instant games;

(5) what advice he has received on the number of jobs lost in the football pools industry if the national lottery is introduced and no changes are permitted in the regime governing footbal pools operation and promotion;

(6) what advice he has received on the consequence for the proposed national lottery's turnover if (a) the number of types of retailer handling lottery tickets were restricted to one, (b) if it were not advertised on television or (c) limits were imposed on prizes and jackpots;

(7) what advice he has received on the impact of the proposed national lottery on retail sales of newspapers and sweets.

Mr. Brooke: The Department commissioned a firm of consultants to advise on a number of aspects of the national lottery. This advice was intended to identify the key determinants for a successful lottery. Among the matters covered was advice on the issues the hon. Member raises in his questions. This advice contained a number of illustrative scenarios based on ranges of assumptions. Much of the information in the report is commercially sensitive to those who provided it, and I do not intend to publish the report.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what advice he has received on the impact of the proposed national lottery on funding for football, assuming no changes in the rules governing pools operation and promotion.

Mr. Brooke: I have received a number of letters from chairmen of football clubs and the Football Trust, which refer to the concerns expressed by the pools companies.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will allow representatives of the GAH consulting group to meet representatives of the pools promoters to discuss its report on the impact of the proposed national lottery on football pools.

Mr. Brooke: GAH is bound by normal Government contract conditions not to disclose details of its report.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what advice he has received on the impact of the proposed national lottery on the sale of premium bonds.

Mr. Brooke: Internal advice suggests that the products offered by these two schemes are very different. Premium bonds are a savings instrument. We expect both schemes to be viable.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he last met the Pools Promoters Association members to discuss the proposed national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: My officials have met the Pools Promoters Association to discuss the national lottery on a number of occasions, most recently on 4 November. I am due to meet the chairman and representatives of the pools companies on 9 December.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his latest forecast of the projected annual income of the national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: All forecasts at this stage must be speculative. I hope that the national lottery will generate substantial sums for good causes.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many reports have been commissioned on the impact of the national lottery on football pools.

Mr. Brooke: The GAH group was commissioned to undertake a report to help the Department shape its legislation on the national lottery. Part of this report looked at the possible effects of the national lottery on the pools industry.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what has been the cost to public funds of the research he has commissioned on the impact of the national lottery on football pools.

Mr. Brooke: The GAH report, commissioned to cover a wide range of issues, cost £44,985.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps he is taking to ensure that football pools are not damaged by the introduction of the national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: The football pools companies have compiled a list of the relaxations they would like to see to the regime which regulates their operations. The Government are considering whether any changes are appropriate.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what advice he has received on the impact of the proposed national lottery on lotteries run by sports clubs.

Mr. Brooke: A number of organisations which run small lotteries, including sports clubs, have submitted information in response to the White Paper "A National Lottery Raising Money for Good Causes".

Historic Homes

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many grade I historic homes have sprinkler systems installed as a fire precaution.

Mr. Brooke: This information is not held centrally and is not readily available.

EMPLOYMENT

Disability Quota

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the percentage quota for disabled people employed by each local authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Tables of figures showing the number and percentage of registered disabled people employed by a wide range of public sector employers, including local authorities, are published annually in the Employment Gazette. This information is published with the agreement of the individual employers. The latest figures for local authorities in England and Wales were published in the February edition of the Employment Gazette, a copy of which is in the Library.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people are currently waiting to get on to places on the YTS; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to the oral reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) on 1 December, at columns 127-28.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime Statistics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing the percentage increase in each category of recorded crime during the 12 months ended June over the 12 months ended June 1989 (a) in England and Wales and (b) in each police force area.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 24 November 1992]: The information requested is contained in the tables.

Domestic Supervision Cases

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide funding for Relate to assist the probation service with domestic supervision cases.

Mr. Jack: I have no plans to give Relate direct funding in relation to supervision orders.

Derek Bentley

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what opportunity he gave to the individuals mentioned in paragraph 7 of his press statement of 1 October, on the case of the late Derek Bentley, to be interviewed or to provide any information supplementary to the material referred to.

Mr. Jack: All the people mentioned in paragraph 7 of the memorandum issued by my right hon. and learned Friend to accompany his statement on 1 October about his review of the case of the late Derek Bentley had the opportunity to submit further material about the case at any time; two persons involved in the preparation of the Thames TV programmes were interviewed by a senior officer in the Metropolitan police in the course of inquiries carried out at the request of my Department.

Burglary

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the burglary at the office of Ms. Tess Lawrence at 109 New Bond street, London W1, on 26 November; what documents were taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: On the evening of 26 November officers from West End Central CID were called to investigate a burglary at 109 New Bond street, the office of Ms. Tess Lawrence.

I understand from the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police that, among the items which were alleged to have been stolen was a copy of a sworn affidavit, draft letter, and various other papers.

Police at West End Central are continuing with their investigations into this incident.

Immigration

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will (a) make available to the members of Standing Committee A on the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill and (b) deposit in the Library the draft immigration rules discussed by the meeting of EC Ministers with responsibility for immigration held in London on 30 November;

(2) if he will (a) make available to the members of Standing Committee A on the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill and (b) deposit in the Library the agenda for the meeting of EC Ministers with responsibility for immigration held in London on 30 November.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Details of the conclusions of the EC Ministers' meeting were placed before the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill Committee and in the Library on 1 December. Details of the agenda for the meeting were placed in the Library on 30 November.

In addition, my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary will shortly be reporting to the House on the discussions and conclusions of EC Ministers responsible for immigration at their meeting on 30 November, and we will be making available those resolutions and recommendations which Ministers adopted.

May Inquiry

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the final report by Sir John May of his inquiry into the convictions of the Maguire family will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General and I have received the final report by Sir John May of his inquiry into the case of the Maguire family and their co-defendants, who were convicted in 1976 of the unlawful possession of explosives. Those convictions were quashed by the Court of Appeal on 26 June 1991 following Sir John's interim report on the case and the decision of the then Home Secretary now Lord Waddington, to refer the whole case to the court under the provisions of section 17(1)(a) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968.

This report is being published today in response to an order of the House for a return. We wish to thank Sir John and all those who assisted him for the care and thoroughness with which his inquiry has examined the circumstances of the convictions of the Maguires and their co-defendants and issues arising therefrom.

In his report Sir John reviews the basis of the decision to prosecute the Maguire family and their co-defendants. He then examines the role of Home Office Ministers and officials in the consideration of representations received over a number of years alleging that there had been a miscarriage of justice. Sir John has also re-examined some of the scientific issues which were dealt with in his interim report, although that re-examination has not caused him to amend his conclusions on the scientific aspects of the case.

It is a very serious matter whenever there is a miscarriage of justice and my right hon. and learned Friend and I are determined that the lessons from such cases should be learned and applied effectively.

Sir John concluded that the criteria which successive Home Secretaries have used to determine whether intervention in a conviction can be justified are sound in law and logic and provides no grounds for criticism. I welcome his further conclusion that, within the limits imposed by those criteria, the Home Office investigated the representations it received with care and thoroughness.

Since the time when those representations were considered, the Home Office has developed its approach to the consideration of alleged miscarriage of justice—in particular, by being ready to investigate the circumstances of a case more widely than the scope of representations made to it and, where there appear to be grounds for doing so, by being ready to initiate inquiries without having first received any representations. We are constantly seeking to apply the lessons to be learned from cases and we will continue to do so, taking account now of what Sir John has said in this report. It will continue to be our aim to give prompt, diligent and impartial consideration to all representations taking whatever action may be necessary including, where appropriate, the referral of a conviction to the Court of Appeal.

Sir John's report raises important questions about the part played by scientific evidence and by expert witnesses in the prosecution of offenders. Since the time when the Maguires and their co-defendants were prosecuted, there have been significant advances in procedures and quality control in the field of forensic science. Questions about the role of experts in criminal proceedings, their responsibilities to the court, prosecution, and defence, the relationship between the forensic science service and the police and access by accused persons to court evidence are being examined by the royal commission on criminal justice.

In his report Sir John May concludes that there should be some new machinery indpendent of the Home Office to consider whether alleged wrongful convictions should be referred to the Court of Appeal. In the oral evidence which I gave recently to the royal commission, I put forward the same proposal.

The commission, of which Sir John May is a member and to whose deliberations he is ideally placed to contribute the wider lessons of his inquiry, is expected to make its own report in June 1993.

Cephalopods

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received the advice of the Animal Procedures Committee on whether cephalopods used in research should be protected by the controls of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government recently received the views of the Animal Procedures Committee. The committee has concluded that there is not yet definite scientific evidence to suggest that cephalopods can experience pain or suffering. However, a majority of the committee believes that there is sufficient doubt about one species of cephalopod, the common octopus or Octopus vulgaris, that the benefit of the doubt should be given to that species and that it should be protected by the 1986 Act.

The Government accept the majority view of the committee and agrees in principle that Octopus vulgaris should be included within the definition of protected animal for the purposes of the 1986 Act. Work is in hand to give effect to this change.

I have placed in the Library of the House a copy of the letter from Lord Nathan, chairman of the APC, to my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary giving details of the committee's considerations.

Blakenhurst Prison

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contract has been let for the management of Blakenhurst prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 5 December 1991 my right hon. Friend the then Home Secretary announced that tenders would be sought for the management of a new 649 place prison at Blakenhurst then under construction near Redditch in Hereford and Worcester.

On 15 June 1992, invitations to tender for the management of Blakenhurst were issued to nine contractors.

Today I am pleased to announce that the contract has been awarded to UK Detention Services Limited. UKDS is a consortium comprising Corrections Corporation of America, John Mowlem & Company and Sir Robert McAlpine & Sons (Trade Investments) Ltd.

The success of UKDS follows detailed consideration of proposals submitted by seven potential contractors in response to the Home Office invitation to tender. There was keen competition to secure the contract and several excellent proposals were received. It was considered that UKDS had submitted well researched proposals underpinned by CCA's experience of running penal establishments in Australia and the USA, which offered value for money, and a high quality regime for prisoners. The quality of all proposals submitted has confirmed our view that the private sector has much to offer.

Blakenhurst is the first private sector local prison and is due to take its first prisoners in April 1993.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Travel Allowances

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council if hon. Members are allowed to claim travelling allowances in respect of travel by bicycle.

Mr. Newton: No.

Members' Funds

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Lord President of the Council what consultations he had before 25 November with the managing trustees of the House of Commons Members' Fund on its role in relation to pensions and death benefits applicable to hon. Members and their dependants from 1 January 1993.

Mr. Newton: I spoke informally on 25 November to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) and my hon. Friend the Member for Horsham (Sir P. Hordern) in their capacities as chairman and member of the trustees of the parliamentary pensions fund: these discussions did not touch specifically on the Members' fund.

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Lord President of the Council what powers the House of Commons Members' Fund has to supplement a pensions benefit in cases where an hon. Member now in service dies or retires due to ill-health after 1 January 1993.

Mr. Newton: The trustees' powers to make discretionary payments are very wide indeed since the Ministerial and Other Pensions and Salaries Act 1991.

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on the circumstances in relation to which it may be necessary to consider the role of the House of Commons Members' Fund in relation to hon. Members' pensions in the very short term.

Mr. Newton: I am discussing pensions matters raised in the debate with the trustees of the parliamentary pensions fund shortly, and have nothing to add at the moment to my remarks at the end of the debate on 25 November.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Privy Council

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will conduct a review into the functions of the Privy Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have no plans to review the functions of the Privy Council.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many appeals from the decisions of professional disciplinary bodies have been heard by the Privy Council in each of the last three years; and if he will provide a breakdown by professional body and the number which are (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful.

Mr. Newton: The total number of appeals in each of the last three years has been:

1991	2
1992	8 (to date)

The details are as follows:

General Dental Council

1990	1 successful, 1 unsuccessful
1991	None
1992	1 awaiting judgment

General Medical Council

1990	1 successful, 1 unsuccessful
1991	2 unsuccessful
1992	1 successful, 5 unsuccessful, 1 awaiting judgment

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Lord President of the Council what representations he has received seeking a review of the functions of the Privy Council in relation to its function in hearing appeals from the decisions of professional disciplinary bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have received no such representations.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on the functions of the Privy Council.

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council advises the sovereign on the making of Royal Proclamations and Orders in Council, and on the grant and amendment of royal charters. It approves certain rules made by statutory registration councils responsible for the medical and certain other professions, and makes instruments of government for higher education corporations. The Privy Council is also responsible for certain appointments to statutory councils and to the governing bodies of universities and colleges, and for the appointment of high sheriffs. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is the final court of appeal from courts of the United Kingdom dependencies and from courts of those independent Commonwealth countries which have retained the right of appeal. The committee also hears appeals from courts of the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man, and from the disciplinary and health committees of the medical and allied professions, together with some ecclesiastical appeals.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans he has to ensure that appeals heard by the Privy Council from persons resident in Scotland are held in accordance with the principles of Scots law; and if he will maake a statement.

Mr. Newton: It is for the Judicial Committee, on the basis of the facts and circumstances of each case, and having heard argument, to determine the relevant applicable legal principles.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many appeals have been heard by the Privy Council from persons who have had their names erased from the medical register by the Professional Conduct Committee of the General Medical Council under the Medical Act 1983 in each of the last three years; and if he will provide a breakdown showing figures for (a) Scotland, (b) Wales, (c) England, (d) Northern Ireland and (e) the United Kingdom and the number which were (i) successful and (ii) unsuccessful.

Mr. Newton: The total number of appeals in each of the last three years has been:

1991	1
1992	3 (to date)

The details are as follows:

Scotland
1990 None

1992 1 awaiting judgment

Wales
1990, 1991 and 1992 None

England
1990 1 unsuccessful
1991 1 unsuccessful
1992 1 successful, 1 unsuccessful

Northern Ireland
1990, 1991 and 1992 None

SOCIAL SECURITY

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will introduce a leakage prevention programme for all refrigeration and air conditioning equipment owned and operated by his Department; if he will publish targets for reductions in leakages; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will implement a refrigerant recycling and reclaim policy covering all departmental equipment currently using chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbons; if he will publish targets for departmental reuse and recycling; if he will implement an equipment conversion and replacement programme for all departmental uses of CFCs and HCFCs; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department will, by the end of 1992, have a green housekeeping strategy in place. It will include a commitment to reducing the use of ozone-depleting substances.

Steps which are being taken to reduce leakages of ozone-depleting refrigerants include regular checks, servicing and maintenance; compliance with professional codes of practice; and installation of leakage detection systems.

The information needed to set targets for reductions is not currently available.

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many civil servants are currently employed by his Department (a) in London and (b) elsewhere.

Mr. Burt: There are 11,572 staff employed in London, and 80,413 staff employed elsewhere.

Notes:

1. Staff numbers relate to permanent staff as at 20 November 1992.
2. London has been defined as the London pay area.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will reply to the letter of 2 November from the hon. Member for Walsall, North, acknowledged under reference S/3644/9, regarding the rule whereby women over 60 years are not allowed to pay the extra sum to qualify for a state pension.

Miss Widdecombe: I replied to the hon. Member's letter yesterday. The delay arose because it was necessary to contact both the Benefits and the Contributions Agencies regarding aspects of the individual case in question.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate (a) the costs for the setting up of the Child Support Agency, (b) the running costs of the Child Support Agency in 1993-94, and for each of the financial years up to the year the agency will be fully operational, (c) the total number of staff the agency will employ, (d) how many staff will be located in the six regional centres, (e) how many child support officers the agency will employ and (f) how many of the child support officers will be located in the six regional centres.

Mr. Burt: The current estimates are:

(a) Total costs of setting up the agency—£146 million.
(b) Running costs of the agency—

£ million

Year	Costs
1993-94	94
1994-95	111
1995-96	117
1996-97	114

(c) The agency will employ around 5,000 staff when fully operational.
(d) About 500 staff employed will be employed in each of the six Child Support Agency centres.
(e) The agency will employ around 1,500 child support officers.
(f) There will be about 250 child support officers located in each Child Support Agency centre.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications it is estimated that the Child Support Agency will deal with in each year from 1993-94 to the year in which it becomes fully operational.

Mr. Burt: The Child Support Agency will become fully operational during 1997-98. On current predictions, the number of applications per year until then are estimated to be as follows:

Year	Applications
1993-94	830
1994-95	570
1995-96	650
1996-97	430

Income Support

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) male and (b) female (i) pensioners and (ii) people of working age were in receipt of income support at the latest available date; and what proportion they made of the relevant population in each case.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the table.

	Number of income support recipients	Percentage of relevant population in Great Britain
Male claimants over 65	270,000	7·64
Female claimants over 60	1,140,000	16·86
Total number of claimants who are of pensionable age	1,410,000	13·70
Male claimants of working age	1,390,000	6·34
Female claimants of working age	1,700,000	7·15
Total number of claimants who are of working age	3,080,000	6·76

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest ten thousand
   Figures may not sum due to rounding
   Pensioners are defined as males over age 65 and females over age 60
2. Source: Income Support Statistics Annual Enquiry, May 1991
   Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, 1990

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people on income support had automatic deductions for (a) electricity, (b) gas, (c) social fund loan repayments, (d) rent arrears, (e) mortgage arrears, (f) water charges and (g) community charge arrears at the latest available date; and what were the average amounts for each type of deduction.

Mr. Burt: The latest available information showing the numbers of income support recipients with deductions is as follows:

	Numbers
Fuel	[1]305,000
Social fund loan repayments	[2]637,000
Rent arrears	[1]134,000
Mortgage interest	[3]461,000
Water charges	[1]147,000
Community charge arrears	[1]337,000

[1] These figures are based on Management Information Statistics (MIS) collected by the Benefits Agency at the end of August 1992. MIS figures do not distinguish between gas and electricity deductions or provide an average amount for each type of deduction. These figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand, are provisional and may be subject to amendments.

[2] It is not possible to exclude from the social fund figure repayments made by people not in receipt of income support.

[3] The figures for mortgage interest deductions is based on the number of direct payments made during November 1992. Recipients with more than one mortgage will be counted more than once.

The latest information available showing separate figures for gas and electricity deductions and the average amount of individual deductions is contained in table 10.1 of volume 1 of the "Department of Social Security Income Support Statistics Annual Statistical Enquiry, May 1991", a copy of which is in the Library.

Figures distinguishing between deductions for current charges and those for arrears are not available.

Prioritisation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance is given by his Department in respect of prioritisation within high priority groups for community care grants and budgeting loans.

Mr. Scott: National guidance on the priority to be accorded to social fund applications is contained in the social fund guide, a copy of which is in the Library.

Child Benefit

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate what the level of child benefit would be in 1993-94 if it had been fully uprated since 1979 and its structure had remained the same.

Mr. Burt: The rate of child benefit in April 1979 was £4 a week for each child. If this level had been uprated annually in line with the retail prices index, and with the normal rounding to the nearest five pence, it would become £9·55 at April 1993.

Invalidity Pension

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women are in receipt of the housewives' non-contributory invalidity pension; and how many men were in receipt of non-contributory invalidity pension in each year since 1984.

Mr. Scott: Severe disablement allowance replaced the two non-contributory invalidity pensions from 29 November 1984. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 23 October, at column 396.

Income-related Benefits

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the latest figures showing the take-up rates of income-related benefits.

Mr. Burt: Work on the statistics on the take-up of income-related benefits in 1989 has not yet been completed. The results will be published early in the new year.

Benefits Agency

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow can expect to receive an answer to his letter, dated 28 October, to Mr. Michael Bichard, chief executive, Benefits Agency, concerning his constituent, Mr. McMaster—Ref. DB103169.

Mr. Scott: Correspondence on operational issues is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr. Norman Godman, dated 2 December 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning correspondence about your constituent Mr. McMaster (Ref. DB103169).

I can confirm that decisions have now been made on Mr. McMaster's claims and these have been notified to him. I replied on 1 December to your letter of 28 October and this explains the position in greater detail.

I offer my sincere apologies to Mr. McMaster for the delay in dealing with his claims and for delay in responding to your correspondence. Clearly neither you nor your constituent have received the standard of service to which you have every right to expect of the Agency. You will be aware from my letter of 19 October to all MPs of the problems we have encountered since the successful launch of the new benefits and the positive steps taken to improve the situation.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Disability Allowances

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set up an emergency office in Stoke on Trent North to deal with outstanding disability living allowance and attendance allowance applications.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance and attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Ms. Joan Walley, dated 2 December 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about setting up an emergency office in Stoke on Trent North to deal with Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Attendance Allowance (AA) claims.

There are no plans to set up an emergency office in Stoke on Trent. New claims to DLA and AA are dealt with by ten Disability Benefit Centres (DBCs) around the country. All claims from the Stoke on Trent area are dealt with by the DBC in Birmingham.

My letter of 19 October to all MPs outlined the measures that were implemented to deal with the backlog of claims successfully. We are of course closely monitoring the effectiveness of the procedures and organisation in place for DLA. As with all new benefits, procedures and organisation will be reviewed and I can assure you that every opportunity will be taken to identify new initiatives to speed up processing times.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Plutonium and Uranium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 23 October, Official Report, column 411, how many representations on plutonium exports his Department has received; and if he will indicate the nature of the representations from the (a) United Kingdom and (b) abroad.

Mr. Eggar: Over the past four months or so, my Department has received over 50 letters which mentioned, in most cases among other topics, the transfer of plutonium overseas. None of these letters came from abroad. Further representations may have been received by other Departments.

The letters came either direct from members of the public or through hon. Members and raised the possible misuse of the plutonium and its safe transport. The replies explained that civil plutonium is transferred overseas only subject to the application of safeguards and on receipt of assurances covering peaceful use, physical protection and controls on re-transfer.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantities of plutonium are contained in (a) nuclear fuel in reactors and (b) spent nuclear fuel in one-site cooling ponds at reactor sites in England and Wales; and what information on this plutonium his Department is required to report to the Euratom safeguards authorities.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested by the hon. Member is given in the annual plutonium figures published by my Department. Operators meet the requirements of the Euratom safeguards authorities by supplying monthly inventory change reports. These reports, which are sent via my Department's safeguards office, include any shipments off site of their irradiated fuel. Reports on such shipments contain estimates of the plutonium content of the fuel.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how long plutonium and depleted uranium is permitted to be stored before these substances can no longer be used as fuel for nuclear power stations without further processing.

Mr. Eggar: The properties of uranium, whether natural, depleted or recovered from reprocessing, do not vary significantly over time. In the case of plutonium, the material changes its characteristics over time, mainly as a result of the formation of americium 241. The rate of this change depends on the burn-up of the fuel and the cooling period before reprocessing. The acceptable levels of americium when re-cycling plutonium are a commercial matter for the manufacturer of the recycled fuel and the operator of the reactor in which it will be used.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when current supplies of uranium will be depleted; and if he will make a statement on the future of the United Kingdom's energy resources.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom has no uranium resources which could be extracted economically under current world market conditions. The Government's aims are to promote the economic development of our indigenous energy resources and to ensure that the United Kingdom's energy needs are met cost-effectively.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will implement a refrigerant recycling and reclaim policy covering all departmental equipment currently using chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbons; if he will publish targets for departmental reuse and recycling; if he will implement an equipment conversion and replacement programme for all departmental uses of CFCs and HCFCs; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce a leakage prevention programme for all refrigeration and air conditioning equipment owned and operated by his Department; if he will publish targets for reductions in leakages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My Department is committed to eliminating the use of ozone-depleting substances on its estate. As an interim measure, the Department has established policies for the use and disposal of such substances which are designed to minimise releases to atmosphere.

Control procedures have been introduced to minimise leakages, including arrangements for the regular monitoring and servicing of refrigerant and air conditioning systems containing ozone-depleting substances. When discharging equipment containing ozone-depleting substances, every effort is made to recover CFCs/HCFCs rather than release them to atmosphere. Wherever practicable, ozone-depleting substances are recycled in order to minimise purchases of new supplies.

Waste to Energy

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to halt any approvals for waste to energy incinerators pending the outcome of the Select Committee inquiry into the pit closure programme.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) on 30 November, at column 33.

Fossil Fuel Levy and Renewable Energy

Mr. Cash: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how much has been levied under the fossil fuel levy in 1990-91 and 1991-92;

(2) what proportion of the amounts levied has been used under the NFFO for renewable energy schemes; and what value this represented in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Eggar: The fossil fuel levy raised £1,175 million in 1990-91,and £1,324 million in 1991-92. The proportion going to renewables was about 0·5 per cent. (£6 million) in 1990-91, and 1 per cent (£15 million) in 1991-92.

Mr. Cash: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what is his latest assessment of the proportion and value of the fossil fuel levy that will be used for renewable energy schemes over the entire life of its operation until December 1998; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assumptions were made about the proportion and value of the fossil fuel levy that would be used for renewable energy schemes over the entire life of its operation until December 1998.

Mr. Eggar: The proportion of levy receipts going to renewables is set to rise through the 1990s. The exact amounts will depend on a number of factors, including the pool price and the number of projects coming forward under the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Electricity

Mr. Cash: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of the electricity bought from the pool by RECs was from renewable energy sources in 1990-91 and 1991-92; how many megawatts this represented; and what are the RECs' obligations under the NFFO in comparable terms.

Mr. Eggar: The great majority of renewables-sourced electricity in the United Kingdom is not traded through the pool. In 1990-91 and 1991-92 about 2 per cent. of electricity generated in the United Kingdom came from renewable energy sources. This represented the output from, respectively, about 1500MW and 1600MW of capacity. The aggregate obligation on the regional electricity companies to contract for electricity from renewable sources eventually builds up to 102MW under the 1990 order and 457MW under the 1991 order. At the end of 1990-91 the obligation was 29MW, and at the end of 1991-92 it was 37MW.

Gas

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether his review of energy policy will address the consequences for long-term gas supplies and gas prices caused by purchasing policies of the regional electricity companies; and what representations he received on this aspect of policy during 1992.

Mr. Eggar: The terms of reference of the Government's coal review were set out in the answer which the President of the Board of Trade gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on 26 October, at columns 522-23. Estimates of likely reserves of gas and the scale of gas-fired power generation in the United Kingdom are being considered in the context of the review, as are the relative costs of gas and coal-fired power generation.

Excluding evidence submitted to the coal review, by the end of November 1992, Ministers had received around 20 representations on these issues.

EC Industry Council

Mr. Hague: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the discussions which took place in the EC Industry Council on 24 November.

Mr. Heseltine: I chaired the meeting of the Industry Council in Brussels on 24 November. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry represented the United Kingdom.

From the United Kingdom point of view, this was a highly successful Council which met all our objectives. In particular, we secured adoption of two resolutions: one on deregulation which highlights the importance of the Commission's impact assessment system in helping to reduce the burdens of EC legislation on industry and will ensure regular scrutiny and review of the Community's record on deregulation; and one which underlines the importance of dialogue with business on the best way of achieving environmental objectives and ties the Commission to assess the costs and benefits of different means of achieving these objectives.

We also succeeded in securing satisfactory Council conclusions on the future of the European Coal and Steel Community which call for substantial reductions in the levy on coal and steel producers.

A discussion of the Commission's annual report on competition policy resulted in Presidency conclusions supporting the vigorous and even-handed application of EC competition policy.

The main debate in the Council centred on proposals for aid to the Spanish steel industry. The Council was unable to approve the derogations from the steel aids code required to accommodate the Spanish proposals. The Council decided that further work was needed and the issue should be reconsidered under the Danish Presidency. The Council discussed recent Commission ideas on restructuring the steel industry, which will also need further consideration under the next Presidency.

Other items briefly discussed included future policy on small and medium-sized enterprises and a Commission communication on the non-energy mining industry.

Telecommunications Council

Mr. Hague: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Telecommunications Council on 19 November.

Mr. Leigh: The Council continued its discussion, begun at the last Council meeting in June, of the European Commission's proposal for a Council decision on an action plan for the introduction of advanced television services in Europe. The action plan proposes a subsidy of up to 850 mecu to help accelerate the development of the market for widescreen and high-definition television services. Agreement was reached on the text of the action plan, subject to a reservation by one member state and consideration of amendments proposed by the European Parliament. However, member states were unable to reach agreement on funding. The United Kingdom opposed the sume of 850 mecu as unacceptably high and questioned the justification for any subsidy. Several other member states could not give agreement to funding while the Community's overall financial perspectives remain to be settled. A number of member states have sought a further meeting of the Telecommunications Council on this issue before the end of the year, but the possibility of further progress on this question will be clearer after the Heads of Government summit in Edinburgh.

The Council also discussed the Commission's review of the situation in the Community telecommunications sector, which considers further liberalisation of the European telecommunications market. It agreed a resolution calling upon the Commission, to report to the next Telecommunications Council, currently scheduled for 10 May 1993, on the results of its consultations on the review document.

Presidency proposals on the process and time scale for taking forward the work on the Commission's Green Paper on postal services, once the present consultation period has ended, were also adopted. The Commission agreed to prepare for the next Council, a summary of the results of the consultation period, the main conclusions which the Commission draw from the consultations and a detailed and signposted timetable for subsequently moving forward to draft directives. The Council also agreed on the urgent need to seek reform of arrangements at both European and global level under which postal administrations account with each other for imbalances in mail flows between them.

The Council adopted resolutions on frequencies and numbering, setting out a framework for future Community action in both these fields. It also reviewed progress on the ONP voice telephony directive and discussed trans-European networks and a Commission communication on the European telecommunications equipment industry.

British Coal Corporation

Mr. Hague: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the final response from the British Coal Corporation concerning the 1989 report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission into the corporation's investment programme.

Mr. Eggar: British Coal has prepared a comprehensive final response to the 1989 report into the corporation's investment programme, which has now been placed in the Library of the House. Many of the issues mentioned in the response, such as the market prospects for coal and the competitiveness of British Coal as an organisation, will be examined in the coal review which was announced in October.

Argentina

Mr. Shersby: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the value of imports from Argentina for the most recent 12 month period for which figures are available; and what is the value of British exports for the same period.

Mr. Needham: The value of imports from Argentina for the 12 months ended September 1992 was £122·3 million. The value of British exports to Argentina was £103·4 million for the same period.

Collieries (Redundancy Applications)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library regularly updated details of how many people are applying for redundancy at each of the 31 collieries originally planned for closure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 1 December 1992]: This is a matter for British Coal.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scots were attending Scottish universities; and how many students were attending Scottish universities from other parts of the United Kingdom in each year since session 1979-80; and if he will list the regions that all students attending Scottish universities were from in each year since session 1979-80.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 November 1992]: The information requested on students attending the eight traditional Scottish universities in the academic years 1979-80 to 1990-91 is given in the tables.

Small Businesses

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many small businesses have gone out of business in Scotland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 November 1992]: Comprehensive information on all types of businesses is not available. The figures in the table refer to liquidations of limited companies registered in Scotland, but it is not possible separately to identify those company liquidations involving small firms.

Disabled Persons' Housing

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many payments were made by Scottish Homes for adaptations to houses for disabled persons in each region in each month since May.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 November 1992]: This information is not held by the Scottish Office Environment Department. I shall ask the chairman of Scottish Homes to write to the hon. Member.

Public Conveniences

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice is given to (a) Scot Rail and (b) local authorities on the proper provision of public conveniences suitable for (i) disabled and elderly people, (ii) public transport users and (iii) those with children; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 November 1992]: Requirements and standards for sanitary facilities, including access, are given in the Technical Standards for Compliance with the Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations 1990. These apply to all buildings open to the public including railway stations and other transport facilities. Guidance on the design of public conveniences with facilities for the disabled was given by the Scottish Office to local authorities in SDD circular No. 53/68.

Police (Court Appearances)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many man hours were used by police officers attending courts in (a) Dundee and (b) Scotland in each of the past five years for which figures are available; and what proportion of total police manpower hours this represented in each year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 November 1992]: This information is not recorded.

Legal Proceedings

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many defendants appeared before the High Court on criminal charges in each of the past three years; how many were (a) convicted and (b) acquitted; how many of those acquitted had pleaded guilty in the first instance; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 December 1992]: The particular information requested is not held centrally. The number of indictments which called in the High Court in each of the past three years, and to the end of October 1992, is as follows:

	Number
1989	773
1990	795
1991	833
1992	786

The information requested on disposals is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many charges were (a) brought and (b) withdrawn by the Procurator Fiscal in each sheriffdom in each of the last three years in (i) the district court and (ii) the sheriff court; how many guilty pleas were tendered to the original charges; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 December 1992]: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Monkfish

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what policy he has for raising the precautionary total allowable catch on monkfish fishing west of 4° w; and if he will make a statement on fishing access to deep water fisheries.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 December 1992]: Scientific studies of west of Scotland anglerfish have been conducted in response to representations from the industry for an increase in total allowable catch. Unfortunately the results suggest that the stock is already fully exploited.

The Government view the development of deep water fisheries as a useful extension of the fishing opportunities available to our fleet.

Haddock

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the fishing community about the accuracy of the calculations used to determine the 1992 North sea haddock total allowable catch.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 December 1992]: I have received a number of representations from the industry about the possibility of increasing the North sea haddock total allowable catch for this year. Scientific surveys conducted during 1992 confirmed the estimates of stock size on which the TAC was set.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the accuracy of the methodology used to arrive at the 1992 haddock North sea total allowable catch; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 December 1992]: The North sea haddock total allowable catch was set on the basis of the stock assessment and of scientific advice on the need for a 30 per cent. reduction from the 1989 level of fishing effort. This advice was based on the standard methodology employed for stock assessment and the reduction in effort was considered necessary in order to reduce the very high level of mortality of the stock.

Marine Mammals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many reports regarding incidental catches of marine mammals by fishermen his fisheries officers have received to date under the scheme set up to monitor the extent of this interaction.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 December 1992]: Since the voluntary report scheme was introduced in January 1992, there have been three confirmed reports of incidental capture of a marine mammal in Scottish waters. These were two porpoises and one dolphin. The dolphin was successfully released.

New Town Housing Stocks

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he proposes to announce the financial arrangements for the transfer of new town housing stocks.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 1 December 1992]: The draft guidance was issued for consultation on 27 November and comments are due to be submitted by 31 January 1993. A copy has been sent to the hon. Member.

Rural Employment

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give an estimate of the effect on job numbers in rural Scotland of (a) the current common agricultural policy reform package and (b) further changes arising from the GATT agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 2 December 1992]: The impact of the CAP measures agreed in May on employment in rural Scotland will depend on the response of the farming community over the next few years. The draft GATT settlement is consonant with those reform measures and should therefore have no separate employment impact.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Leukaemia and Cancer Children's Fund applied for a special grant of £35,000 for the Millerfield family centre; when it was paid; what criteria he applied in considering this application; which fund was the source of the grant; and if he will list the grants given in 1992 from the same source.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 December 1992]: The Leukaemia and Cancer Children's Fund applied to the Scottish Office Home and Health Department in May this year for funding under the scheme of grants operated under section 16B of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978. The grant was paid in June this year to meet the organisation's immediate funding difficulties. As with all such applications, the criteria employed were those set out in statute and in the memorandum of guidance approved by Her Majesty's Treasury which applies to the scheme. The possibility of assisting the fund in 1993-94 is still under consideration. Expenditure on the section 16B grant scheme is borne on vote 12 subhead K6(1). Total expenditure on that sub-programme in the current financial year will amount to some £300,000, and the following bodies will benefit:

Action on Smoking and Health (Scotland)
Age Concern Scotland
ACET—AIDS Care and Education Training
Alzheimers Scotland
Bell's Palsy Self-Help Group

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many special grants have been awarded in 1992 to voluntary and charitable organisations;

(2) how many grant applications his Department received from voluntary organisations in the last year for which figures are available; and how many of these applications were not successful in obtaining his Department's funding.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 December 1992]: My right hon. Friend is directly responsible for a wide range of voluntary sector grant schemes. Grants may be for continuing administrative costs, projects, capital expenditure or in exceptional circumstances single payments. In 1991-92 the Department received 722 applications from voluntary organisations from which 463 grants were given.

ACCOMMODATION AND WORKS COMMITTEE

Westminster Hall (Fire Prevention)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will review fire prevention in respect of Westminster hall (a) generally and (b) in relation to its historic roof.

Mr. Ray Powell: A 10-year programme for upgrading fire precautions within the Palace of Westminster is nearing its completion. It has been agreed by Her Majesty's inspector of fire services. Following the appointment of a fire safety manager earlier this year, those measures and related procedures are already under review. As part of the existing procedures, all areas of the parliamentary estate, including Westminster hall, are patrolled regularly by members of the Palace of Westminster fire section. Plans for further preventive measures, which will specifically include protection for the roof of Westminster hall, are in hand.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Church Property Investments

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what is the value of Church property investments for each year since 1987.

Mr. Alison: The value of the Church Commissioners' property investments held at the end of each year was as follows:

	£ million
1987	1,128
1988	1,327
1989	1,441
1990	1,171
1991	1,034

There is no centrally held information of the value of other Church property.

Fulham Football Club Ground

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what was the independent valuation of the Fulham football club ground at Craven Cottage prior to its sale to Mr. Ernie Clay.

Mr. Alison: As I said in my answer on 26 November to an earlier question from the hon. Member for Pendle, the Commissioners' property investments are professionally valued each year. Their freehold interest in Fulham Football Club ground was valued at £70,000 as at 31 December 1984.

DEFENCE

RAF (Schools)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of state for Defence if he will list the RAF establishment bases within the United Kingdom that currently have an on-site school for the children of RAF personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following RAF stations within the United Kingdom currently have on-site schools for children of service personnel aged between five and 18:

RAF Benson
RAF Coltishall
RAF Coningsby
RAF Cottesmore
RAF Digby
RAF Henlow
RAF High Wycombe
RAF Kinloss
RAF Leeming
RAF Odiham
RAF Scampton
RAF St. Mawgan
RAF Wyton

In all cases, the local education authority is responsible for the school and admission is not restricted to RAF dependants.

Amphibious Helicopter Carrier

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the prospects are of the proposed amphibious helicopter carrier for the Royal Navy being built in the near future.

Mr. Aitken: Our current plans are to place a contract in the autumn of 1993.

Nuclear Submarines

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many SSNs and SSBNs will be decommissioned in the next five years; and what are the Navy's plans for laying up of these submarines.

Mr. Aitken: It is not our practice to reveal in advance details of plans for decommissioning nuclear-powered submarines. Our policy remains that when nuclear-powered sumarines have been decommissioned the hulls are stored afloat at a suitable berth, pending eventual disposal.

Strategic Nuclear Force (Employee Costs)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current cost per employee of the strategic nuclear force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I gave the estimated cost of the nuclear strategic force for the current financial year in an answer to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 6 November 1992, Official Report, column 533. This equates to approximately £2,700 for each of the Ministry of Defence's 469,000 service and civilian employees.

Challenger

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost to date of Challenger; and if he will report on progress with regard to the sale of this vessel.

Mr. Aitken: The total project acquisition cost of HMS Challenger, together with the cost of the two docking periods which she has undergone is some £240 million at 1990-91 prices. The marketing of the ship continues.

Defence Exports

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy relating to the release of information on the export of British defence equipment to (a) Argentina and (b) Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The policy of successive Governments has been to treat information about specific defence exports as commercially confidential. In the special circumstances of Argentina and Iraq, information that is not commercially sensitive has exceptionally been made public.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his oral remarks of 23 November, Official Report, columns 705-6, if he will now release information on the export of British defence equipment to Argentina; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Information on the export of defence equipment to Argentina was given in the answer to question 7 of the minutes of evidence before the Foreign Affairs Committee on 10 November 1982. A defence equipment embargo has been in force since the 1982 Falklands conflict.

AWACS Contract

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the figure of offset business placed with British firms on the AWACS contract following the Nimrod cancellation; was this greater or less than the 13 per cent. offset agreement; what proportion of this business would have been placed in the United Kingdom if Nimrod had not been cancelled; and if he will list which firms benefited.

Mr. Aitken: As I stated in my answer of 20 May, Official Record, column 190, Boeing has submitted to my Department reports listing contracts placed with United Kingdom firms totalling some $2·1 billion, of which we have agreed some $1·57 billion to count for offset credit. This latter figure exceeds the 130 per cent. target set in the agreement and Boeing have therefore met their obligation. It is not possible to say what proportion of these orders would have been placed in the United Kingdom had Nimrod not been cancelled. Details of Boeing's reports of the firms which benefited are commercially confidential and cannot be released.

Warships (Refitting and Repair)

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, when he now intends to publish his proposals for future arrangements for warship refitting and repair; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: We continue to receive from a variety of sources much detailed and important information which bears on future arrangements for the refitting and repair of Royal Navy vessels, particularly nuclear-powered submarines. This information has recently included a further series of proposals from the contractors at the royal dockyards for the provision of the new dockyard facilities that will be needed to support Trident submarines. We now expect that the need to assess properly the latest contractor proposals will preclude an announcement before the House returns after the Christmas recess, but we will make an announcement thereafter as soon as we responsibly can.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Alcohol Products

12. Mr. Enright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussion he has held in the Council of Agriculture Ministers on equal treatment for British alcohol products in continental countries of the EC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I defend British interests at all times, but there has been no recent discussion within the Council of Agriculture Ministers on this subject.

Departmental Canteen

13. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for introducing into his Department's official canteen animal welfare friendly and environmentally friendly foods, including game meat and game fish.

Mr. Soames: The Government's policy on consumer choice is fully reflected in menus offered in the Department's staff restaurants.

Fish Laboratories

14. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress on the new building programme at his Department's fish laboratories in Weymouth.

Mr. Curry: Tenders for the main building works were received on 23 November and are being evaluated. We expect to appoint a contractor before Christmas with a view to completing the works early in 1994.

Retirement Schemes

15. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will reconsider the Government's policy on pre-pension retirement schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: No.

Slaughterhouses

16. Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement about the implementation of the costs directive and the hygiene directive in their application to slaughterhouses.

Mr. Soames: In response to the widespread concern across Europe about the impact of these directives on small abattoirs, my right hon. Friend announced yesterday that he is arranging for the December Council of Agriculture Ministers to consider whether any further action at Community level is required to safeguard small traditional slaughtering businesses.

As far as implementation in Great Britain is concerned, local authorities are at present responsible for meat inspection and hygiene control in slaughterhouses and are required to charge for this service. Where their actual costs are higher than the standard charge specified in the EC decision on meat inspection charges, they have discretion to recover less than their full costs. The Department has this week issued further guidance which should enable some local authorities to provide the inspection service at a lower cost than they have been estimating.

GATT

17. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the implications for agriculture of the current situation in the GATT talks.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes).

22. Mr. Denham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the action taken by his Department to monitor the effects of the GATT negotiations on food standards.

Mr. Soames: The GATT round negotiations have not specifically addressed food standards, but will provide for greater transparency in the setting and enforcement of animal and plant health requirements affecting trade.

28. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the GATT negotiations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have had discussions about the GATT negotiations with a wide range of individuals and organisations.

Potato Marketing

18. Mrs. Browning: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the United Kingdom potato marketing scheme.

Mr. Curry: The Government will take decisions on the future of the potato marketing scheme in the light of the recently published proposals for an EC potato regime and following extensive consultations.

Common Agricultural Policy

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many civil servants are currently employed by his Department (a) in London, (b) in Scotland and (c) elsewhere.

Mr. Curry: The information as at 1 December 1992 is shown as follows. The figures include permanent and casual staff but exclude fee-paid staff, and those on loan or unpaid leave.

	Number
(a) London	3,468·0
(b) Scotland	205·5
(c) Elsewhere	7,092·0

Part-time staff are counted as half posts.

Rapeseed

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has of the effects of a discontinuance of the rapeseed subsidies on British farmers.

Mr. Curry: EC subsidies to rapeseed growers have not been discontinued, though the previous tonnage payments have been replaced by an area payment scheme.

Fisheries (Rating)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce legislation to introduce into the Water Resources Act 1991 a right of appeal against rating of fisheries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I have no plans to do so. Section 115 of the Water Resources Act 1991 already provides for the inclusion of supplemental and consequential provisions in any order providing for the payment of contributions by owners and occupiers of fisheries. A right of appeal could be introduced under such provisions. This is a matter which the National Rivers Authority will have to take into account in developing its proposals for a contribution scheme.

Food Premises (Inspection)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many inspections of food premises have been carried out by each local authority in England under the Food Safety Act 1990; and how many of those inspections have resulted in (a) the issuing of improvement and emergency prohibition notices, (b) informal warning letters of (c) the voluntary closures of companies.

Mr. Soames: At present information is available only for 1991. This is given in the table[1].

[1] These statistics cover work carried out by local authorities under the Food Safety Act 1990, regulations made under it and the Official Control of Foodstuffs Directive. They exclude:
meat hygiene inspections carried out under EC veterinary legislation;
milk hygiene inspections of production plants;
inspections carried out by the Wine Standards Board under EC wine legislation.

[2] The number of food hygiene and food standards inspections covers:
inspection of premises;
inspection of equipment including cleaning and maintenance equipment;
inspection of process or operational procedure;
inspection of the hygiene or practices of personnel;
inspection of food (including ingredients, additives and products at any stage of manufacture) or contact materials; inspection of labels, labelling equipment and advertising matter and/or inspection of records.
These figures exclude all other visits to check compliance with notices, sampling visits and visits to follow up complaints.

[3] Excludes figures for first quarter of 1991. This was only required on a voluntary basis.

[4] For port health authorities this includes the number of consignments and ships' kitchens inspected.

Wildlife Incident Investigation

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future funding of the wildlife incident investigation scheme in England and Wales.

Mr. Soames: Officials are reviewing the information required to monitor the effects of pesticides on wildlife and will be putting proposals to the Advisory Committee on Pesticides. Arrangements for funding will need to be considered in the light of their conclusions.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he or his officials last met representatives of the agrochemical industry to discuss the future funding of the wildlife incident investigation schemes.

Mr. Soames: Officials met representatives of the agrochemical industry and other interested organisations on 30 October to discuss industry funding of pesticides related work, including the wildlife incident investigation schemes.

Animal Carcases

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what action has been taken against farmers reported for leaving animal carcases in fields during the last 12 months;

(2) what information he has regarding recent cases of decomposing sheep carcases being left in fields with grazing cattle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The state veterinary service has continued over the last 12 months to monitor closely reports of dumping of animal carcases wherever they occur. Whenever evidence of offenders is available they act with local authorities to try to ensure that prosecutions are secured as appropriate. Legislation is being drawn up to implement the EC directive on the disposal of animal waste, which will increase the penalties for the dumping of carcases.

Calves (Transport)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, column 890, what are the welfare implications of sealing vehicles transporting calves from Great Britain to Holland.

Mr. Soames: Any sealing of vehicles would be required to be carried out without prejudicing the welfare of the animals and in conformity with legislation on the protection of animals during transportation.

Mink

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes in procedure have been adopted by his Department on mink farming since August 1989.

Mr. Soames: No changes to departmental procedures have been implemented in this time.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons his officials did not inspect two adjoining mink sheds when inspecting Swalesmoor Mink Farm to ensure compliance with the Mink (Keeping) Order 1987 in 1987, 1988 and in April and September 1989.

Mr. Soames: An additional inspection covering the buildings in question was carried out in September 1989, when officials were made aware that mink were being kept in them. The visit confirmed that the security arrangements in operation complied with the Mink (Keeping) Regulations 1975, as amended, which lay down the manner in which mink can be kept under licence. The mink farm owner was therefore acting within the terms of the licence issued to him, to keep mink in any building on the farm.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what monitoring his Department conducts of breaches of the Mink (Keeping) Order 1987.

Mr. Soames: All mink farms are inspected annually by officials of ADAS, the Ministry's wildlife experts, to ensure that they meet the security requirements laid down for the keeping of mink. Any reported breaches of these security requirements would also be investigated by ADAS.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications for licences to operate a mink farm have been rejected since the coming into operation of the Mink (Keeping) Order 1987.

Mr. Soames: No applications for licences to keep mink in a mink farm have been rejected since the coming into operation of the Mink (Keeping) Order 1987.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many reports of mink escapes from fur farms have been officially notified since 1980;

(2) how many reports of mink escapes from fur farms have been officially notified since 1987.

Mr. Soames: Based on available information, the Ministry has received only one report of escapes of mink from a fur-farming establishment since 1980.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provisions are made by his Department to protect the welfare of mink during transportation.

Mr. Soames: Welfare of mink during transport is protected by provisions of the Transit of Animals (General) Order 1973, as amended. The legislation imposes a duty of care on all those who transport animals. It requires transport in suitable conditions and animals must be fed and watered at appropriate intervals.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what conditions apply to the transportation of mink between licensed premises under the Mink (Keeping) Order 1987.

Mr. Soames: The Mink (Keeping) Regulations 1975, as amended, as currently applied by the Mink (Keeping) Order 1987, require that no mink shall be transported from place to place except in closed cages or other containers constructed in such a manner and of such materials as to prevent their escape.

Horses (Export)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the export and transit of horses next to be discussed in the EC Agriculture Ministers' Committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Directive 91/628 provides for national safeguards to remain applicable until the Council decides what additional safeguards are necessary. No timetable has been set for a return to the subject.

Intervention Board

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 4 November, Official Report, columns 283-86, if he will list by name and location the company that the chief executive of the Intervention Board visited on his fact-finding visit in respect of deboning beef for intervention storage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Since this question concerns a matter which is the direct responsibility of the chief executive of the Intervention Board Executive Agency, I am asking him to write directly to the hon. Member.

Letter from Guy Stapleton to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 3 December 1992:

You asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, following his Answer of 4 November reported in Hansard at columns 283-6, whether he would list by name and location the deboning company I included in my previous letter to you as one of my fact-finding visits. As this is a matter within the operational responsibility of this Agency, the Minister has asked me to reply to you direct.

The company was Barretts & Baird of West Bromwich.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many people received legal aid this year; and how many of these would have been eligible and how many would pay increased contributions, if the changes in legal aid announced for England and Wales were to be introduced to Northern Ireland.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In the year ended 31 March 1992, the legal aid department of the Law Society of Northern Ireland, issued 14,585 civil legal aid certificates. In addition 56,508 bills for legal advice and assistance and 11,320 bills for legal assistance by way of representation were paid.

In the above cases contributions were required in 1,601 —11 per cent.—of civil legal aid cases, in 1,607—3 per cent.—of legal advice and assistance cases and in 1,242 —11 per cent.—of assistance by way of representation cases. In all other cases no contribution was required.

Information regarding how many of those involved would be eligible and how many would pay increased contributions, if the changes in legal aid announced for England and Wales were to be introduced in Northern Ireland, is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The system of granting criminal legal aid in Northern Ireland is different from that in operation in England and Wales and a direct comparison of the effect of proposed changes in England and Wales is not possible.

Divorce

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he has completed his review of all aspects of divorce reform and conciliation following the Law Commission's recommendations; and what proposals he has to establish a counselling and mediation service.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor is considering the Law Commission's recommendations and the role and funding of family mediation services. His review of these matters is not yet complete and therefore it would be premature to put forward proposals on what are difficult and controversial issues.

TRANSPORT

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many civil servants from his Department have been relocated from London to other parts of the United Kingdom (a) in the last five years and (b) in the last 10 years; and to where they were relocated.

Mr. Norris: The Department of Transport has relocated 267 posts from London in the last five years and 307 in the last 10 years, as follows:

New Location	Unit	Posts Relocated
Farnborough—	Air Accidents Investigation Branch	40
Nottingham—	Driving Standards Agency Headquarters	120
Leeds—	Highways Computing	42
Coventry—	Motorway Widening Unit	105

Roadside Testing

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he proposes to take to introduce roadside testing to ensure on-road compliance of motor cycles, cars, light vans, buses and heavy goods vehicles with emission standards for (a) carbon monoxide, (b) smoke and (c) noise; and if he will set annual targets for such testing.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The police and the Department's vehicle examiners have the power to check vehicles at the roadside for emissions. The use of those powers by the police is a matter for the chief constables. The Department's examiners make a visual assessment of emissions at the roadside as part of roadworthiness inspections. The targets for these inspections in 1992-93 are 125,000 heavy goods vehicles, 23,000 public service vehicles and 33,000 cars and light goods vehicles. In addition, there will be metered roadside checks of smoke and carbon monoxide emissions from some 13,000 vehicles.

By 1 January next year, annual roadworthiness tests of most vehicles apart from motorcycles will include metered checks of carbon monoxide and smoke. Those tests are the main way of dealing with excessive on-road emissions from individual vehicles.

Excessive noise arising from a missing or a faulty silencer would lead to failure at annual test and prohibition at the roadside.

Catalytic Converters

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many responses he has received to his proposal to allow a derogation for the sale of cars not fitted with catalytic converters after 1 January 1993; how many respondents (a) supported and (b) opposed his proposal; which motor manufacturing companies (i) supported and (ii) opposed his proposal; what estimate he has made of the number of vehicles not fitted with a catalytic converter left unsold on 1 January 1993; and when he will announce his decision.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Of some 400 representative organisations consulted in accordance with section 195(2) of the Road Traffic Act 1988, only 25 replied with substantive comments. Of these, 18 were in favour or raised no objection and seven opposed the derogation. The Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders welcomed the measures on behalf of the industry as a whole. Of individual motor manufacturing companies, Ford, Mazda, Proton, Rolls-Royce and Rover welcomed the proposal, whereas Bristol Cars did not consider it would be of use to them. No motor manufacturers opposed the proposal. We estimate that there may be some 32,000 cars left unsold by 31 December which will benefit from the proposal. This represents a little under 2 per cent. of projected registrations this year. Having considered the representations, I made the related regulations (SIs 1992 Nos. 2908 and 2909) on 19 November and they were laid before the House on 26 November.

Motorcycles

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received (a) at the international motorcycle show or (b) elsewhere about the desirability of relaxing rules which prevent motorcycles with plastic petrol tanks being sold in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There have been a number of representations from the motorcycle industry requesting a relaxation of the current rules so as to allow plastic fuel tanks to be used on motorcycles. We are actively considering a change and intend to consult on draft amending regulations very soon.

Thames Bridges (Traffic)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the information he has about plans to close or restrict vehicular and pedestrian traffic during the next six months in respect of each of those Thames bridges between Tower bridge and Hampton Court bridge which allow vehicular or pedestrian access.

Mr. Norris: The Thames bridges which carry trunk roads and for which my right hon. Friend is the highway authority are those at Twickenham (A316), Chiswick (A316), and Kew (A205). He has no plans to close or restrict any of these bridges in the next six months.

The appropriate London borough councils, and the City of London, are responsible for the other Thames bridges. The following restrictions apply or are planned:-

Tower Bridge
17 tonnes weight. Weekend closure on 22-23 and 29-30 January for renovation.

London Bridge
Lane closures for one week at some time in the summer for resurfacing the King William street approach.

Waterloo Bridge
Closure on 2-15 January to replace an expansion joint.

Westminster Bridge
7·5 tonnes weight. The co-ordination of work to upgrade the bridge, starting in the summer, and work to extend the Jubilee Line is currently under discussion.

Lambeth Bridge
Closures and lane closures to renew expansion joints, but no start date yet decided.

Chelsea Bridge
Footways will be repaired in January and February.

Albert Bridge
Closure for one weekend in March for programmed maintenance. Further weekend closures in the summer for deck repairs.

Battersea Bridge
Closed since 29 November and expected to re-open in February.

Hammersmith Bridge
3 tonnes weight. Lane closures from 4 January to mid-February for programmed maintenance.

Blue Light Emergency Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all those companies registered with his Department who are offering blue light emergency services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Operators of vehicles using blue warning beacons and special warning lights are not required with this Department.

The Road Vehicles Lighting Regulations make provision for these lamps to be used on "emergency vehicles" which are defined as motor vehicles of any of the following descriptions:

(a) a vehicle used for fire brigade, ambulance or police purposes;

(b) an ambulance, being a vehicle (other than an invalid carriage) which is constructed or adapted for the purposes of conveying sick or injured persons and which is used for such purposes;

(c) a vehicle owned by a body formed primarily for the purposes of fire salvage and used for those or similar purposes;

(d) a vehicle owned by the Forestry Commission or by a local authority and used from time to time for the purposes of fighting fires;

(e) a vehicle owned by the Secretary of State for Defence and used—
(i) for the purposes of the disposal of bombs or explosives,
(ii) by the Naval Emergency Monitoring Organisation for the purposes of a nuclear accident or an incident involving radioactivity,
(iii) by the Royal Air Force mountain rescue service for the purposes of rescue operations or any other emergencies, or
(iv) by the Royal Air Force armament support unit;

(f) a vehicle primarily used for the purposes of the Blood Transfusion Service provided under the National Health Service Act 1977 or under the National Health Service (Scotland) act 1978;

(g) a vehicle used by Her Majesty's Coastguard or Coastguard Auxilliary Service for the purposes of giving aid to persons in danger or vessels in distress on or near the coast;

(h) a vehicle owned by the British Coal Corporation and used for the purposes of rescue operations at mines;

(i) a vehicle owned by the Royal National Lifeboat Institution and used for the purposes of launching lifeboats; and

(j) a vehicle primarily used for the purpose of conveying any human tissue for transplanting or similar purposes.

London Buses Ltd.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the privatisation of London Buses Ltd.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend has written to the chairman of London Transport to inform him of the Government's agreement in principle to the early privatisation of the subsidiaries of London Buses Ltd.

Before the companies can be sold, the services they operate on behalf of London Transport must be put on a clear contractual basis. Forty per cent. of the London Transport network is already operated under contract by private firms or London Buses Ltd. companies, and there will be a further round of competitive tendering next year to increase that proportion. The remaining routes operated by London Buses Ltd. subsidiaries will be put on a formal contractual basis from 1 April 1993, paving the way for the London Buses Ltd. companies to be offered for sale from late 1993 onwards.

The Government remain firmly committed to de-regulating the London bus market at the earliest opportunity. Early privatisation will help to ensure that competition in the deregulated market takes place on a free and fair basis.

ENVIRONMENT

Emissions

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what work has been undertaken to date by his Department to monitor emission levels from manufacturing industries in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: The main polluting industries are controlled under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and the Alkali etc. Works Regulation Act 1906. The emphasis is on operators of these industries monitoring their own emissions. The relevant enforcing authorities have powers to check that this monitoring is undertaken satisfactorily and to carry out their own monitoring in order to substantiate the operator's results or to investigate matters not covered by the operator's monitoring programme.

Water Quality

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial assistance Her Majesty's Government gave to improve water quality for each of the last five years before water privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: A considerable proportion of investment by the former water authorities had the effect of improving water quality. Some details of that expenditure were given in the DOE chapters of the annual public expenditure White Paper. Investment expenditure was met from water charges and borrowing: the limits for the latter were set out in the White Papers.

Water Supplies

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to which authorities the disconnection of a water supply to an inhabited premises with a water meter is notifiable.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 4 November 1992, at column 235, which applies irrespective of the method of charging in use.

Housing Starts

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of private sector housing starts in England for the 1991-92 year.

Mr. Baldry: It is estimated that in England during the financial year 1991-92 there were 113,300 private enterprise and 19,700 housing association starts.

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what analyses of the safety, or impact on human health, of unleaded petrol have been carried out; if he will give details; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The hon. Member may have in mind the fact that the benzene content of unleaded petrol in the United Kingdom is typically rather higher, at 3 to 4 per cent., than for leaded petrol—2·5 per cent. Benzene is a genotoxic carcinogen. A number of studies have been made of the effects of occupational exposure to benzene, and the Department's expert panel on air quality standards has been asked to make recommendations on an ambient air quality standard for benzene. However, the major source of benzene emissions in the United Kingdom is not the evaporation of petrol but rather petrol engine exhaust, and most of the benzene in this exhaust arises from the "cracking" of aromatics in the engine rather than from the original benzene content of the fuel. Harmful exhaust emissions, including benzene, can be drastically reduced by fitting three-way catalytic converters to cars. This will be mandatory under EC standards for new cars from the end of 1992. Cars with catalytic converters will run only on unleaded petrol.

Tarmac

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many meetings took place between Tarmac and individual members of the Property Services Agency Projects board from October 1991 to October 1992; and if he will make a statement on the nature of these meetings;

(2) if he will list the meetings between Tarmac and the Property Services Agency Projects board from October 1991 to October 1992; and if he will make a statement on the nature of these meetings.

Mr. Redwood: Many meetings would have taken place between individual members of the PSA Projects board and Tarmac as with any major construction company, in the normal course of business. The PSA board has met Tarmac twice during this period as part of projects' efforts to establish itself as a commercial organisation. In addition during the due diligence phase of the sale process, both the board and individual board members met Tarmac on the same basis as other shortlisted bidders. Following Tarmac's selection as preferred bidder at the end of September there were frequent meetings between board members and Tarmac in preparation for staff consultation about the sale and to develop Tarmac's plans for the business.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list and quantify all existing claims for liquidated damages (a) from the former Property Services Agency Projects board against Tarmac and (b) from Tarmac against the former Property Services Agency Projects board.

Mr. Redwood: There are no existing claims between Tarmac and the former Property Services Agency Projects board. Property Services Agency Projects no longer advises client departments on current claims against or by Tarmac. The contracts relating to such claims have been the responsibility of client departments since 1 April 1990. The amounts of claims by commercial companies against Government Departments are commercially confidential.

City Grant

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the expenditure on city grant in the assisted areas in each year since its inception;

(2) how much city grant expenditure there has been in the metropolitan borough of Wirral council district in each year since its inception;

(3) what percentage of city grant spending took place in the assisted areas (a) in each year since its inception and (b) in total since its inception.

Mr. Robin Squire: City grant expenditure approved for projects in assisted areas since the introduction of city grant in 1988, and the percentage of total expenditure is as follows:

	£ million	per cent.
In assisted areas
1988-89	4·752	19
1989-90	28·684	44
1990-91	34·741	65
1991-92	56·468	74
1992-93[1]	31·128	66
In Wirral metropolitan borough council aarea
1988-89	0·000	—
1989-90	0·000	—
1990-91	0·126	—
1991-92	2·173	—
1992-93	0·000	—

[1] In first eight months.

Total expenditure approved for projects in assisted areas represents 58 per cent. of all city grant expenditure approved to date.

All figures exclude grant offers not taken up.

City Challenge

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria or performance indicators will be taken into account, apart from measuring each authority's performance against the strategic objectives and outputs specified in the action plans, for the purposes of the city challenge scheme in considering which pacemaker authorities should receive more or less than the average sum originally promised per pacemaker authority.

Mr. Robin Squire: The 11 city challenge pacemakers will each receive £37·5 million over five years, subject only to an annual review of progress toward achieving the strategic objectives and outputs specified in their action plans.

Building Control Fees

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the current level of building control fees; and what was the level of those fees in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available;

(2) what was the rise in both actual and percentage terms of the most recent increase in building control fees; when that increase was implemented; and upon what basis that increase was calculated;

(3) if he will make a statement outlining the reasons for levelling building control fees; and for which precise categories of building work they are levied.

Mr. Baldry: The current level of building control fees payable to local authorities in England and Wales is set out in the Building (Amendment of Prescribed Fees) Regulations 1992 (1992 No. 2079). These regulations, which were laid before Parliament on 9 September 1992 and came into operation on 1 October 1992, provided for an increase in fees for all three categories of building work: new housing, domestic extensions and alterations, and all other types of work including industrial and commercial.

Building control fees are levied so that the costs of providing the service are paid for primarily by the developer rather than by the taxpayer generally. The purpose of the increase was threefold: to keep fee levels in line with inflation since the previous increase in February 1991; to reflect increased local authority workload arising from the Building Regulations 1991; and to reduce the deficit between fee income and the cost of the building control service, which was particularly large for work involving domestic extensions and alterations. The average increase for most categories of work was 9·4 per cent. The actual fee for an average sized house increased from £209 to £228; for 10 houses from £1,802 to £1,972; for a £0·5 million non-domestic building from £2,440 to £2,668. For non-domestic work above £1 million the fees remained unchanged. Fees for domestic extensions and alterations inceased by 50 per cent., involving an actual rise for an average sized extension from £60 to £90; and for larger extensions from £120 to £180.

The level of fees charged by local authorities over the last 10 years are set out in the following statutory instruments which are available in the Library of the House:

Statutory Instrument	Came into force
1982 No. 577	1 July 1982
1983 No. 1611 (Amendment)	19 December 1983
1985 No. 1576	11 November 1985
1986 No. 2287 (Amendment)	1 February 1987
1988 No. 871 (Amendment)	13 June 1988
1989 No. 1118 (Amendment)	1 September 1989
1990 No. 2600 (Amendment)	1 February 1991

The separate building regulations system for London was incorporated into the national arrangements in 1985 and 1987 and the building regulation fees existing at the time in England and Wales were applied to London under the Building (Inner London) Regulations, Statutory Instruments 1985 No. 1936 and 1987 No. 798 which came into force on 6 January 1986 and 1 July 1987 respectively.

Home Improvements (Compensation)

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish a consultation paper on the new right to compensation for home improvements in the Housing and Urban Development Bill.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. and learned Friend, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales have today published a consultation paper entitled "Compensation for Tenants' Improvements". The consultation paper seeks views from interested parties on the operation of a new mandatory scheme whereby local authority tenants can receive compensation for carrying out worthwhile home improvements, once their tenancy ends. In line with the citizens charter, the scheme will benefit all council tenants, and provide encouragement and recognition for the commitment some tenants make towards improving their homes.

The powers to establish this new scheme are contained in clause 109 of the Housing and Urban Development Bill.

A consultation paper on the introduction of a similar scheme in Scotland will be issued by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. Copies of both consultation papers will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Waste (Definition)

Mr. Marland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to amend the regulations governing the definition of waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 2 December 1992]: Waste is defined in section 75 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The Government have no plans to amend the section. The definition of controlled waste in the same section of that Act is qualified in the Controlled Waste Regulations 1992 (SI 1992 No. 588).

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution has been promised by the United Kingdom to the interim multilateral fund to assist with the prevention of ozone depletion; and what funds have so far been paid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Burnely (Mr. Pike) on 3 December (column 302).

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Citizens Charter

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will describe the place and the date on which each of the photographs in the citizens charter first report: 1992 Cm. 2101 was taken; and if he will place in the Library an untrimmed copy of the photograph facing the contents page, showing the background behind the people.

Mr. Waldegrave:

An untrimmed version of the photograph that faces the contents page has been placed in the Library of the House. It was taken in Victoria street, London SW1, in June 1989.

EDUCATION

School Curriculum and Assessment Authority

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what arrangements he is making for the appointment of the proposed school curriculum and assessment authority.

Mr. Patten: To ensure that the appropriate preparations can be made for the establishment of the school curriculum and assessment authority, my Department has appointed a firm of management consultants to help draw up a list of appropriate candidates with the qualities and skills necessary to a successful chairman. A panel, chaired by the first civil service commissioner, will consider their advice, interview those on the shortlist and make recommendations to me. Any appointment will be subject to the passage of the legislation.

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what arrangements he has made for setting up the new school curriculum and assessment authority.

Mr. Patten: The Government intend, subject to the passage of the necessary legislation, to establish a new authority in England to be responsible for matters relating to the national curriculum and the associated assessment arrangements. Parliamentary approval to expenditure associated with preparing for the establishment of the new authority will be sought in a supply estimate for the schools, research and miscellaneous services vote (class X, vote 1, in 1993-94). Pending that approval, essential preparatory expenditure estimated at £90,000 in 1992-93 will be met by a repayable advance from the contingencies fund.

Teacher Training

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the bursary scheme for students on courses of initial teacher training in shortage subjects.

Mr. Forth: The shortage subject bursary scheme provides incentive payments to students taking post-graduate certificate in education and two-year BEd courses in mathematics, science, technology and modern foreign languages. Although recruitment to these and other courses of initial teacher training is buoyant and the vacancy rate for teachers is now lower than it has been for over 10 years, the bursary scheme is still needed to help maintain teacher supply in those subject areas which are most difficult to recruit to. My right hon. Friend will therefore make expenditure provision available for the scheme in the next financial year; but, to reflect spending priorities, the current bouyancy of recruitment to teacher training and the lw loevel of teacher vacancies, my right hon. Friend and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales intend to seek parliamentary approval for a change in the relevant statutory instrument to alter the level of payment at which the bursary will be set.

The current main rate of bursary is £1,500 a year, and there are extra payments to those on courses in physics and craft, design and technology. We intend to introduce a flat-rate bursary of £1,000 for all students commencing eligible courses on or after 1 September 1993.

Engineers

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what plans his Department has to encourage qualified engineers to enter teaching; how many qualified engineers and electrical engineers have been recruited to the teaching profession for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the total number of (a) qualified engineers and (b) electrical engineers currently in the teaching profession at (i) school and (ii) university and higher education level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Government do not collect statistics on the number of qualified engineers in or joining the teaching profession in schools and higher education.

The Department provides bursaries to encourage graduates in appropriate disciplines—including engineering—to undertake initial teacher training in certain secondary school subjects including technology and physics. The Department has also initiated a number of specific measures to encourage mature career changers, including engineers, to enter school teaching. These include organising and part funding a programme of "Taste of Teaching" courses run by higher education institutions; encouraging the development of new shortened teacher training courses for mature entrants, including engineers; and introducing and financing new entry routes into the profession via the licensed teacher and articled teacher schemes.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans his Department has to increase the use of outside engineers in technology courses.

Mr. Forman: There has been a considerable expansion of links between industry and education over the last decade. Government have encouraged and welcomed this development which has led to an increase in the involvement of engineers with education at all levels. Within this context, it is for individual institutions to decide the form particular links with industry should take, and the extent to which this could include the involvement of practising engineers in engineering and technology courses.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans his Department has to encourage qualified engineers and electrical engineers to enter teaching at university and higher education level.

Mr. Forman: It is for institutions to recruit the staff they need to provide high-quality teaching in engineering and other subjects. The Government have no plans to intervene in this process. More flexible pay structures in recent years have enabled management to target pay on specific areas of recruitment difficulty.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans his Department has to promote engineering within technology courses in the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: A number of national curriculum subjects, including mathematics, science, technology and art, offer pupils the opportunities to acquire fundamental knowledge, skills and understanding appropriate for the study of engineering after the age of 16. My right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for Education and for Wales are currently considering the recommendations of the national curriculum technology review group and will make a full statement when their joint proposals are published for consultation later in December.

Technology

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to promote technology courses within the national curriculum in (a) city technology colleges and (b) other schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Under the national curriculum, the study of technology is now compulsory for all pupils in maintained schools aged between five and 14 (unless specifically excepted) and will become so for pupils aged between 14 and 16 from August 1993. It is for local authorities and individual schools to decide how best to support this study from within the £176 million of expenditure supported through the Department's grants for education support and training programme to assist with the implementation of the national curriculum.

City technology colleges have been established specifically to promote the teaching of mathematics, science and technology. Similarly, schools funded under the technology schools initiative are committed to promoting particularly their technology teaching and its vocational aspects. My right hon. Friend will be announcing a further tranche of funding under this initiative shortly.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each city technology college (a) the total number of pupils taking GCSE in technology, (b) the total number per grade obtained and (c) the percentage of pupils who participated in technology courses for the latest year figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The first pupils to have undertaken a full CTC secondary education will not take GCSE until 1993, and the majority not until 1995. There are therefore no GCSE results for CTC technology yet. All CTC pupils undertake technology courses.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of pupils participate in technology courses in schools other than city technology colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Under the national curriculum, the study of technology is compulsory for all pupils in maintained schools aged between five and 14 (unless specifically excepted) and will become so for pupils aged between 14 and 16 in August 1993. Information about the number of pupils aged between 14 and 16 following general courses in technology in the current academic year is not available centrally.

Higher Education

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the proportion of students in England who currently go on to higher education.

Mr. Forman: The usual indicator of participation by young people in higher education is the age participation index (API)—that is the number of full-time and sandwich home initial entrants aged less than 21 expressed as a percentage of the averaged 18 to 19 age group. The API for Great Britain in 1991-92 was 23·5 per cent. and is thought to have reached about 28 per cent this autumn. No corresponding figures for England are available.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Coastal Protection

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many miles of (a) sea defences and (b) coast protection works there are in Northern Ireland; where each is situated; who is responsible for them; and what is the residual life of each.

Mr. Atkins: Roads service of the Department of the Environment carries out work to deal with coastal erosion at the following locations where the structural stability of the road is threatened:

Road	Location	Length (miles)	Approximate residual life (years)
A2	Warrenpoint	1·55	20

Northern Ireland Railways carries out running repair sea defence work on the following lines:

Location	Length (miles)	Approximate residual life (years)
Larne line	8·00	20
Londonderry line (along Foyle Estuary)	10·00	20
Bangor line at Holywood	0·25	20

The Department of Agriculture has statutory powers under the Drainage (NI) Order 1973 to maintain sea defences which have been designated by the Drainage Council for Northern Ireland. The locations and lengths of designated sea defences are:

	Miles
North Down
Newtownards/Comber Dyke	3·0
Holywood	0·2
North Londonderry
Myroe Embankment	3·0
Ballykelly Embankment	2·0
Longfield Embankment	3·8
Black Brae Embankment	2·0

It is not possible to determine accurately the residual life of each designated sea defence as this depends on future weather and tidal combinations as well as the condition of the defence.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what surveys have been carried out funded by his Department on coastal erosion in Northern Ireland in recent years; and where the conclusions were published.

Mr. Atkins: Two studies have been carried out by Professor R. W. G. Carter and funded by the environment service of the Department of the Environment.

(i) "Coastal Erosion and Management in Antrim Coast and Glens and Causeway Coast AONBs" published by HMSO Belfast in early 1991 as "Shifting Sands"; and

(ii) "Monitoring Sand Removal in Antrim Coast and Glens and Causeway Coast AONBs". The findings of this survey were published in "Aquatic Conservation" Vol 2 in 1992.

In addition the Department of Agriculture has agreed to make a contribution towards a feasibilty study which was commissioned by Coleraine borough council into coastal erosion problems at Portballintrae. The study report has just been completed and its publication is now a matter for Coleraine borough council.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to improve (a) sea defences and (b) coastal protection in Northern Ireland in each of the next three years.

Mr. Atkins: Subject to the availability of finance, the roads service of the Department of the Environment proposes to spend approximately £21,000 and £50,000 in the 1993-94 and 1994-95 financial years respectively to improve existing coastal protection measures in the Coleraine and Ballycastle areas. The Department of Agriculture has plans to commence works in 1993 to refurbish the Myroe embankment at Lough Foyle. Following a recent preliminary inspection of the other three Lough Foyle embankments, the Department is about to commission more detailed feasibilty studies on the Ballykelly and Longfield embankments. A study of the Black Brae embankment will also be initiated within the next three years.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums were expended by Government on (a) sea defences and (b) coastal protection works in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years; and how much in each year was expended on (a) capital works, (b) repairs and (c) maintenance.

Mr. Atkins: The information is as follows:

Financial year	[1] Roads service Department of the Environment £'000	[2] Northern Ireland railways £'000	[3] Department of Agriculture £'000
1987-88	146	2	40
1988-89	291	137	109
1989-90	93	15	164
1990-91	251	21	223

[1] Expenditure on repairs and maintenance to protect coasts where structural stability of a road was threatened—no capital expenditure incurred.
[2] Mostly capital expenditure on running repairs.
[3] Expenditure on maintenance and repairs of designated sea defences.

In addition the environment service, Department of the Environment has paid out the following amounts in grant-aid towards local anti-erosion schemes carried out by agencies:

Agency and financial year	Amount £'000
1987-88	0

Draught Proofing

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for replacing the energy grant for draught proofing in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of Economic Development is reviewing the administrative arrangements for assistance with draught proofing and insulating low income homes in Northern Ireland and I hope to announce the outcome early in the new year.

DEFENCE

RAF Elvington

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if, in considering the future of the runway at the erstwhile RAF station at Elvington, near York, he will undertake to give first priority to potential purchasers representing recreational organisations;

(2) whether the disposal of the runway and flying facilities at the erstwhile RAF station at Elvington, near York, will be with, or without, flying rights;

(3) if he will list the potential alternative uses being considered for the runway at the erstwhile RAF station at Elvington, near York; and what consideration has been given to the practicality of the dismantling of the runway for the provision of construction infill;

(4) what proposals he has for retaining, or disposing of, the headquarters building and residential accommodation associated with the erstwhile RAF station at Elvington near York;

(5) what proposals are under consideration, or what decisions taken, for the future of all, or part, of the runway at the erstwhile RAF station at Elvington, near York.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: RAF Elvington ceased being a relief landing ground with effect from September 1992. My Department is currently examining whether there is an alternative defence use for all or part of the station. It is therefore too early to say what the possible future uses for RAF Elvington may be but, in keeping with our obligation to secure the best possible receipts from the sale of public assets, we would wish to explore all available options in consultation with the local authorities should the site become surplus to requirements.

Potential options indentified to date include the return of the airfield to agricultural use; its sale for outdoor recreational or flying purposes; and its use as a source of construction infill through the removal of the runway and hardstandings. Preliminary specialist advice in respect of the latter option has been sought. It is not possible to foreclose any option at this stage or to give priority to any particular use, either for the runway or the airfield as a whole. All relevant factors, including local aspirations and our own operational interests, would be assessed before decisions were taken on whether any disposal would be with or without flying rights.

There are no headquarters buildings or residential accommodation specifically associated with RAF Elvington although our requirement for facilities at RAF Church Fenton, which were previously used to support RAF Elvington, is currently being reviewed following the former's transition to relief landing ground status from April 1992.

Low Flying

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many investigations into incidents involving low-flying jets were conducted in Cumbria over each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Records are not kept by county of the number of investigations conducted into incidents involving low-flying aircraft.

Submarines (Irish Sea)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions have been held with representatives of the fishing industry in the constituency of South Down concerning the operation of submarines in the Irish sea and north channel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The operation of submarines in inshore fishing waters, including the Irish sea and North channel, has been discussed at a number of meetings of the relevant sub-group of the Fishing Industry Safety group, on which the Northern Ireland Fishermen's Federation is represented.

Civil Emergencies

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Details of military assistance during industrial disputes is given in the table. I also refer the hon. Member to table 6.3 in successive editions of the "Statement on the Defence Estates" volume 2 and to table 3.13 in the "Defence Statistics 1992".

Details of assistance during civil emergencies is not held in the form requested and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Historic Buildings (Fires)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what advice has been given to those who manage, on behalf of the nation, the royal palaces, Crown and stately homes following the result of the investigations into the cause and extent of the fire at the National Trust property, Uppark house, West Sussex in 1989.

Mr. Brooke: In 1990 the Fire Protection Association, on behalf of the United Kingdom working party on fire safety in historic buildings, published a guide to the protection of historic buildings—"Heritage under Fire". This publication, which had full Government support, was intended to help the owner or occupier of an historic building to implement procedures to reduce the possibility of fire and, in the event of fire, to minimise its impact on the building and its contents. It drew on the experience of a number of fires, including those at Uppark house and Hampton Court palace. The guide has been distributed widely to owners of historic buildings, including the Historic Royal Palaces Agency and Government Departments. The Department of the Environment also produces a series of regularly updated guidance notes on fire prevention in historic buildings.

Windsor Castle

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, when the Berkshire fire service report on the cause of the Windsor castle fire will be published.

Mr. Brooke: Both the royal household and I have received the report. The royal household is publishing the report today and I am placing a copy in the Library of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Cars (Security Systems)

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals to legislate to ensure that all British car manufacturers provide in-built security systems to all models of motor cars.

Mr. Jack: Manufacturers selling into the United Kingdom market are already obliged to comply with the Motor Vehicle (Type Approval) (Great Britain) Regulations 1984 which, in turn, require them to meet certain minimum standards as regards preventing the unauthorised use of motor vehicles.

Work is in hand to update these requirements but new legislation on car security is dependant on reaching agreement within the European Community. Discussions are therefore taking place within Europe on vehicle alarm systems, door locks and improved steering locks. The Department of Transport is taking the lead in these discussions and has the full support of the Home Office. The requirements of any future European Commission directives on car security will form the basis of legislative proposals.

In the meantime, we are encouraging motor manufacturers to improve voluntarily the level of vehicle security. Many manufacturers have responded positively, and many more new cars are now being fitted with security systems as standard equipment. We shall continue to press for further improvements in this area.

Metropolitan Police (Damages)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much in compensation, both in court and in out of court settlements, the Metropolitan police have paid to members of the public who have brought court cases for damages in each of the last five years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is set out in the table.

Year	Out of court settlements £	Court awards £
1988	250,000	104,000

Asylum

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide an up-to-date account of the number of applications for asylum currently outstanding.

Mr. Charles Wardle: During the first week in November we undertook a full count of asylum cases. This shows that on 1 November there was a total of 51,800 initial applications awaiting decisions. These figures exclude dependants.

Life Prisoners

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home department how many life licence prisoners who are currently the subject of a Parole Board recommendation for release on licence are awaiting a ministerial decision; and what is (a) the average time taken in processing and (b) the target time for processing such decisions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As at 27 November, the cases of 64 life sentence prisoners who had been recommended for release by the Parole Board were under consideration.

In the 12 months ending 30 September, the average time taken to notify life sentence prisoners of the outcome of reviews—from the date of the local review committee's initial consideration—was 6·5 months. We aim to get the average down to six months by next March.

1991	7·0	6·0
1992	5·0	6·5

Note:
Figures are for 1 April each year and show full-time equivalent staff.

The reduction in the number of doctors and nurses reflects primarily a policy of HSE not itself directly providing occupational health services. For example, it appoints local doctors to conduct statutory medical examinations that were previously conducted by HSE staff.

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many civil servants are currently employed by her Department (a) in London and (b) elsewhere.

Mr. McLoughlin: A total of 11,333 in London and 55,774 elsewhere on 13 November 1992.

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many civil servants from her Department have been relocated from London to other parts of the United Kingdom (a) in the last five years and (b) in the last 10 years; and to where they were relocated.

Mr. McLoughlin: Between 1982 and 1992 some 4,380 civil service posts from the Department were relocated to other parts of the United Kingdom. In the last five years 1,504 posts were transferred: 938 to Sheffield; 400 to Runcorn; 85 to Aberdeen; 56 to Merseyside and 25 to Bootle. In the previous five years 2,877 posts were moved: 1,877 to Sheffield and 1,000 to Bootle.

Training

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made of the risks of 18-year-olds slipping through the net between what is available under YTS and the options available under the various adult training and employment schemes.

Mr. McLoughlin: There should be no risk of 18-year-olds missing out on training or employment measures. Those who leave full time education are immediately eligible for YT, and those who have been unemployed for six months or more are guaranteed appropriate support under the range of provision for unemployed adults.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps she is taking to establish a simplified and co-ordinated information service targeted at 17 to 18-year-olds following merger of the employment action and employment training schemes; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Comprehensive information, advice and guidance to 17 and 18-year-olds is provided by local education authority careers services. They will provide information on the new training for work arrangements, as they do for the range of training programmes. Information will also be available from the Employment Service, athough it will mainly deal directly with those 18-year-olds who might be eligible for adult programmes through being unemployed for six months or more.

Safety Helmets (Sikhs)

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) of 20 November, Official Report, column 396, for what reasons she will not include special provision for turban-wearing followers of the Sikh religion in the proposed regulations to implement the European directive on the use of personal protective equipment at work.

Mr. McLoughlin: The regulations in question have been made under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. Exemptions cannot be granted other than on grounds of health and safety. It was not therefore possible to include any exemption or special provision in the regulations to implement the use of personal protective equipment directive. Exemptions can only be secured by primary legislation, as in the case of the current exemption from the requirement to wear head protection on construction sites which was secured by the Employment Act 1989.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to extend the existing exemptions under the Employment Act 1989 concerning Sikhs, to non-construction sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to extend the existing exemptions under the Employment Act 1989 for turban-wearing followers of the Sikh religion.

Older Workers

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will now announce the membership of the Advisory Group on Older Workers.

Mr. McLoughlin: I announced the membership of the Advisory Group on Older Workers on 2 December. I am very pleased to have secured the services of 11 people with wide experience of industry and the problems caused by age discrimination. The group, which I shall chair, will start work in the new year.

The members are:

Lilian Bennett	Chairman, Manpower plc
Roslin Fraser	Deputy President Royal College of Nursing
Anne Gibson	National Officer, MSF
Archie Gibson	former General Manager, Bank of Scotland
Sally Greengross	Director, Age Concern
Anne Mackie	former employee relations manager, Unilever plc
Rafiq Malik	member of Blackburn Racial Equality Council
Anthea Tinker	Professor of Gerontology, King's College

Stephen Ward	Personnel Director, Birmingham City Council
Denis Waxman	Managing Director, Hays Personnel
Dianah Worman	Equal Opportunities Adviser, Institute of Personnel Management

Domiciliary Care Agencies

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to her answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 55, if she will break down the overall figure of licensed employment agencies whose activities may include domiciliary care work indicating in which local authority or travel to work areas these agencies are located.

Mr. McLoughlin: A breakdown in the form requested is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Greater Manchester Ambulance Service

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many Greater Manchester ambulance service personnel have successfully proved unfair dismissal at industrial tribunals in each of the past four years and 1992 to date; and what is the total sum of money awarded by tribunals over the same period.

Mr. McLoughlin: According to the records held by the regional office of the industrial tribunals—Manchester—there have been three such cases. The awards made in respect of these cases totalled £21,183.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Budget Proposals

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the budget proposals for 1993 for (a) income support, (b) family credit, ((c) council tax benefit and (d) the social fund; and if he will list these budgets indexed against, (i) the retail price index and (ii) average male earnings.

Mr. Burt: Details of our expenditure plans, including those for income support, family credit and council tax benefit for the next financial year will be available when the departmental report is published in February 1993. On 12 November it was announced that income support, family credit, and council tax benefit would be uprated, from April 1993, by the Rossi index (3·6 per cent.), which increased at the same rate as the retail price index (RPI) for September 1991 to September 1992. The average male earnings index for the same period was 4·7 per cent.

The social fund discretionary budget will be around £340 million in 1993-94. This represents an increase of 12 per cent. over the previous year.

Income Support

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money is included in income support payments to meet water charges; and how many income support claimants have water charges of (a) less than £2 per week and (b) £2 per week or more, giving the number for each additional range of £1.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) on 18 May 1992 at cols 28-9. It is estimated that in 1989 the distribution of water charges for income support recipients was as shown in the table.

Water charges (£ per week)	Caseload
Nil	745
0 - 2	2,330
2 - 3	960
3 - 4	110
4 and over	20
Total	4,160

Notes:
1. Caseloads are thousands rounded to the nearest 5,000
2. Source: 1989 Family Expenditure Survey. Caseloads have been weighted to the 1989 Income Support statistical enquiry.
3. Amounts for water include sewerage and environmental charges.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the level of income support and other benefits in real and at 1983 price terms for each of the last 10 years for (a) 16 and 17-year-olds, (b) 18 to 24-year-olds and (c) those aged 25 years or over.

Mr. Burt: Income support was introduced in April 1988. The tables provide the rates for each year since 1988 and at 1992 prices.

Table (A) single person (aged 16-17)

Notes:
1. As supplementary benefit (the predecessor to income support) varied according to household status and entitlement to a range of special additions, it is not appropriate to make comparisons with income support. Because of this, the reply is restricted to 1988 onwards and 1992 prices.
2. Anyone receiving income support is entitled to maximum housing benefit and community charge benefit (ie 100 per cent. of eligible rent and 80 per cent. of eligible community charge).
3. A wide range of other benefits are available to single people subject to their meeting the qualifying conditions.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money is included in income support payments to meet water and sewerage charges.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) on 18 May at cols 28-9.

National Insurance Fund

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the maximum figure for the transfer of funds from Parliament to the national insurance fund of 17 per cent. of benefit outgoings from 1994-95 onwards was fixed; and what working assumptions were used.

Mr. Burt: Proposals for the maximum amounts of Treasury grant were finalised at the time of the Chancellor's autumn statement. The working assumptions used to inform consideration of the maximum amounts were those published in table 2D.1 of Cm. 2096.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the reasons for the decrease in the Treasury supplement to the national insurance fund (a) between 1981 and 1985 and (b) currently.

Mr. Burt: (a) The Social Security (Contributions) Act 1981 permited the amount of the Treasury supplement to be varied by up to 2 per cent. The changes in amounts between the tax years 1981-82 and 1985-86 reflected the views taken by the Government at successive re-ratings on the appropriate balance of national insurance fund expenditure to be met by contributors and taxpayers, in the light of the circumstances at the time.

(b) The Treasury supplement was abolished in 1989.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the assumptions used in calculating the maximum level of transfers from Parliament to the national insurance fund of 20 per cent. of benefit outgoings in 1993-94 and 17 per cent. in future years were identical to those used in table 20.1 of Cm. 2096.

Mr. Burt: Yes.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what effect each increase in unemployment of 100,000 would have on the national insurance fund in 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96 in cash and constant prices.

Mr. Burt: The effect in 1993-94 is set out in paragraph 22 of the Government Actuary's report (Cm. 2097). In later years the figures would be broadly similar.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what working assumption of unemployment levels was used for 1994-95 and future years to calculate the maximum transfer of money provided by Parliament to the national insurance fund of 17 per cent. of benefit outgoings.

Mr. Burt: The working assumptions published in table 2D.1 of Cm. 2096 were taken into consideration in setting the maximum level of Treasury grant for the years 1994-95 onwards.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox), Official Report, column 690, what percentage of the national insurance fund has been paid out in national insurance rebates, tax reliefs and other incentives paid in respect of personal pensions contracted out of the state earnings-related pension scheme for each of the past four years; and what is the equivalent expected percentage in each of the next four years.

Mr. Burt: Although for administrative reasons tax relief is paid with the rebate, because it is claimed back from the Inland Revenue it is not a charge on the national insurance fund.

Not all the information requested is available. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Maintenance Payments

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what means are used in pursuing maintenance payments from males under the age of 18 years.

Mr. Burt: All absent parents are liable to support their children. If under the age of 18, cases are referred to a manager who will consider the circumstances and decide whether the absent parent should be approached. If the absent parent is under the age of 16, a parent or guardian must be present at any interview. If between 16 and 18, the absent parent can choose to have someone else present.

War Pensions

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes he is making to the criteria by which war pensions are awarded from 1 January 1993; what is the estimated number of people likely to be affected by the new regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State anounced proposals to introduce, from 7 January 1993, a threshold for claims for noise-induced hearing loss bringing the war pension rules more into line with those for industrial injury awards. The effect would be that those with less than 20 per cent. disablement in respect of that condition would receive no award. No existing war pensioners with an award in respect of noise induced hearing loss would be affected. It is estimated that in 1993-94 some 10,000 new claimants would be affected.

It is also proposed that savings from this proposal be used to remove rank differential in war disablement pensions from April 1993. Almost 200,000 war disablement pensioners would gain up to £5 a week as a result.

These proposals were discussed yesterday with the Central Advisory Committee on War Pensions; the comments of committee members are under consideration.

Benefit Offices (Newham)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if Newham district Benefits Agency offices are paying all social fund claims falling into revised high priority groups for community care grants and budgeting loans;

(2) what items and circumstances previously eligible for community care grants and budgeting loans have been removed from high priority lists in Newham's benefit offices during the current year;

(3) what guidance was given to the Newham Benefits Agency social fund manager in respect of categories removed from the high priority list of items and circumstances for community care grants and budgeting loans between August and October; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what changes in the level of priority of items for community care grants and budgeting loans in the Newham district Benefits Agency social fund resulted from the budget overspend in June and July;

(5) if he will increase the budget allocation for community care grants and budgeting loans to Newham district Benefits Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Tony Banks, dated 3 December 1992:

As chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Social Fund priorities and budget allocations in the Benefits Agency's Newham District.

Social Fund Officers (SFOs) must determine each application on its own merits in the light of all the relevant factors and circumstances. While SFOs are subject to the law and the Secretary of State's directions, they have discretion about whether to make a payment, having regard to the circumstances of an individual applicant.

SFOs must give priority to high priority needs while adopting as consistent an approach as possible throughout the year. To assist them in this, the Area SFO (District Manager) gives them guidance on priorities. It is for the Area SFO to give guidance on the order of priorities for his area, and which are to be classed as high, medium or low priority. It must be stressed that this is guidance and therefore not binding on the SFO, but it must be taken into account. There is therefore no question of eligibility for payment. All items and circumstances may be paid depending on the individual circumstances of the applicant.

Allocations are made annually to each District for loans and grants. In order for the Area SFO to manage the allocations effectively, monthly profiles of expenditure are planned. These serve as a guide only and it is not the case, therefore, that the Newham District allocation was overspent in June and July.

The Benefits Agency's Newham District is continuing to pay all Social Fund applications that fall into the high priority groups for grants and loans as suggested by the Area SFO.

The Secretary of State requires the Area SFO to monitor monthly expenditure on Social Fund and adjust the guidance to SFOs as required. No specific additional guidance has been given by the Secretary of State. Following the monthly review in August, the Area SFO decided that payment for some items and services could no longer be sustained consistently from the District allocation. She therefore issued amended guidance with effect from 1 September 1992. The effect of this guidance was that some items and services which the previous guidance had indicated would normally attract high priority would now attract medium priority.

Social Fund budgets are closely monitored and Newham District received an increase of £49,525 to its loans budget in November. There are no plans to increase the grants budget of this District.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Day Centres

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the reasons why individuals on invalidity and sick benefit are entitled to claim re-imbursement for travel to health service day centres but not to local authority day centres.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

There are statutory arrangements to provide help with the travelling expenses necessarily incurred by National Health Service patients on income support, family credit or low income when they attend a hospital for treatment, including attendance at day hospitals. Local authorities have discretion to charge for the day and domiciliary services they provide, including transport to day centres. In doing so they should have regard to the service user's means and ability to pay.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Tropical Timber

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been received at the recent preparatory committee from Governments of tropical countries concerning the expansion of the International Tropical Timber Agreement to encompass timber from all forest types; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A few tropical timber countries represented at the preparatory committee proposed that the agreement should be extended to include non-tropical timber. No formal proposal for such an extension was put forward by tropical timber countries as a whole.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what commitments have been made by the United Kingdom in relation to the International Tropical Timber Organisation's targets and guidelines.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As a member of the International Tropical Timber Organisation we are committed to playing our part in achieving the target of the year 2000 for all internationally traded tropical timber from sustainably managed forests and assisting in the implementation of the International Tropical Timber Organisation's guidelines on sustainable management and biodiversity.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much funding has been contributed by the United Kingdom Government to the administrative and special accounts of the International Tropical Timber Organisation since 1987; and what is the Government's overall budget for matters related to the International Tropical Timber Organisation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our contributions to the International Tropical Timber Organisations administrative account which are annually assessed in United States dollars are:

1987	58,466
1988	59,895
1989	66,411
1990	74,601
1991	98,602
1992	86,358

The sterling equivalent of the 1992 payment was £49,500. In addition we also make payments on a case by case basis to projects under ITTO's special account. In the United Kingdom financial year ending 31 March 1992 we contributed £213,000.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the steps taken by the Government (a) to investigate the feasibility of forest monitoring, timber tracing and product labelling of timber from well managed forests and (b) to monitor the level of imports into the United Kingdom of tropical timber from sustainably managed and environmentally benign and socially beneficial sources.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We provided finance to ITTO to carry out an initial study of the feasibility of labelling based originally on a proposal from Friends of the Earth. We are supporting work on incentives which might be introduced at local level in Ghana to ensure sustainable forest management. We are also offering the Soil Association help to finance the preparation of draft standards for tropical forest management as part of its work on timber certification in association with the Forest Stewardship Council.

More work needs to be done on the design and establishment of labelling, certification and monitoring systems before it would be practicable to introduce import monitoring of tropical timber as proposed.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been received by the Government from representatives of the timber industry concerning the renegotiation of the international tropical timber agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Representations have been received from the National Hardwood Association of the Tropical Timber Federation.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has of a relationship between tropical deforestation rates and population growth.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The relationship is complex. To improve our knowledge and understanding of the linkages we have commissioned a programme of research through the University of Bradford.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent preparatory committee to renegotiate the international tropical timber agreement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The recent Preparatory Committee provided for an initial exchange of views on the possible elements of a renegotiated agreement which will be pursued at a further meeting in Quito, Ecuador next January.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been received by the Government from non-governmental environmental organisations concerning the inclusion of timber from all forest types under the international tropical timber agreement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Representations have been received from the World Wide Fund for Nature and Friends of the Earth.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the agreement reached at UNCED regarding the trade in forest products.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the forest principles agreed at UNCED, it was decided that trade in forest products should be based on non-discriminatory and multilaterally agreed rules and procedures consistent with international trade law and practices.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken by the Government to review the progress made in implementing the international tropical timber agreement 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In preparation for the renegotiation of the ITTA, the ODA, in co-operation with other interested Departments and EC member states and in consultation with interested non-governmental organisations and the relevant trade federation, have been assessing progress on the implementation of the agreement to date.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to ensure that commitments made at the UNCED concerning the conservation of the world's forests are promoted through the United Kingdom Government's contribution to the renegotiation of the international tropical timber agreement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the renegotiation of the ITTA, we are pressing for the inclusion of the relevant elements of forests principles agreed at UNCED to be incorporated into the agreement.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to expand the mandate of the work of the International Tropical Timber Organisation to deal with timber trade from all forests.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no such plans but we are prepared to consider proposals put forward formally by the ITTO tropical timber producing countries.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the prices received by developing countries for their exports of mahogany, iroko, meranti, ramin, sapele and kertuing timbers and timber products since 1985.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The prices received by developing countries fluctuate with market conditions and variations in quality and the specification of the timber product. They are quoted in a range of currencies. In recent years the trend has been for trade in value added goods—eg moulding, and window frames to increase.

The following indicative figures have been supplied by the Timber Trade Federation.

Cameroon

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what overseas development aid is given to Cameroon by either Britain or the EC; and what plans he has to reduce it because of the Cameroon Government's policies.

Mr. Lennox Boyd: Britain's aid programme to Cameroon in the current United Kingdom financial year is £3·2 million, focused on forestry and education. EC aid for 1992 is 49·5 mecu (£37·5 million), devoted to rural development, the environment and roads, of which the United Kingdom share is 8·1 mecu (£6·14 million). We are keeping the situation under review in consultation with other major donors.

Leningrad Model Farm

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 June, Official Report, column 695, if he will make a further statement on progress on setting up a model farm in the Leningrad Oblast.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 3 December 1992]: Following a visit to Russia from 23 July to 2 August 1992, the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service (ADAS), in close consultation wih the St. Petersburg Agrarian university, has drawn up a business plan for the establishment of a privatised model farm in the Leningrad Oblast. The plan has been submitted to the mayor of St. Petersburg. We await his reactions.

Russia

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to provide specialist advice from the know-how fund on the establishment of co-ownership housing schemes in the Russian federation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 3 December 1992]: Know-how fund (KHF) assistance to Russia concentrates on four priority sectors: energy, small business development, food distribution and production, and financial services. The establishment of co-ownership housing schemes falls outside these sectors. We have no plans to change this policy.

All-Russia Fund

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial and technical assistance he has made available to the all-Russia fund for the promotion of individual flats; and if he will make it his policy to provide the all-Russia fund with expert legal, financial and policy advice from appropriate agencies and companies in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 3 December 1992]: We have provided no financial and technical assistance to the all-Russia fund for the promotion of individual flats and we have no plans to do so.

Humanitarian Needs Assessments

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessments of humanitarian needs have been conducted by his Department, the European Community and the United Nations in respect of Albania, Bosnia and Croatia for the next six months; what were the results of those assessments; and what funding his Department will provide to meet estimated needs.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 20 November 1992]: In Albania an assessment of food needs was made by the European Community in June 1992. As a result the EC agreed further food aid of £28 million, bringing total EC food aid in Albania to £84 million. The United Kingdom contribution to this is £12 million. It is estimated that the latest grant, together with assistance pledged by other donors, should be sufficient to satisfy food requirements up to spring 1993. In addition bilaterally we have contributed £1·5 million to needs identified by various NGOs between September 1991 and November 1992. The EC, United Nations and United Kingdom are also monitoring the situation in northern Albania where there are reports of extensive loss of life following recent floods.

In Bosnia and Croatia, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has taken the lead in assessing needs and co-ordinating the international community's response to the crisis. In September they estimated that total requirements for humanitarian relief for all of the former Yugoslavia from September 1992 until April 1993 were approximately $1 billion; and they appealed for $434 million (£287 million) to meet the highest priority needs. We have responded by providing more than £70 million of which £41 million has been channelled through the EC and over £29½ million bilaterally. Virtually all of this has been used in Bosnia and Croatia but specific figures by country are not available. The UNHCR continues to keep assessments under review.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Self-regulatory Organisations

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the self-regulatory bodies overseeing the banking, insurance and pensions institutions and the number of organisations affiliated to each.

Mr. Nelson: The investment business activities of banks, insurance and pensions institutions are regulated under the Financial Services Act by the Securities and Investments Board, the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation, the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation and the Securities and Futures Authority. Latest available information on the total number of firms regulated by each body and the numbers falling within the specified categories are as follows:

	Total	Banks	Life offices	Pensions scheme members
SIB	79	12	6	—
LAUTRO	640	—	226	—
IMRO	1,248	52	8	162

Note: Firms can be regulated by more than one body.

Financial Services

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals to establish a statutory body to monitor the financial services industry.

Mr. Nelson: No. Many of the statutory functions under the Financial Services Act are exercisable by the Securities and Investments Board.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to amend the Financial Services Act 1986 to increase protection for savers.

Mr. Nelson: I have no plans to do so.

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out in real terms United Kingdom receipts and expenditure arising from EC membership in each year since 1972.

Sir John Cope: The United Kingdom's gross expenditures (after abatement and negotiated refunds) to, and public sector receipts from, the European Community budget in constant 1991 prices for the years 1973 to 1991 are given in the table.

Drugs

Mr. Richards: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total value of drugs seized in the United Kingdom for the year 1991-92.

Sir John Cope: In the year 1991-92, the value of drugs seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise was £354·87 million.

Drugs Seizures

Mr. Richards: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total value of drugs seized at Welsh ports by customs officers in 1991-92.

Sir John Cope: In the year 1991-92 the value of drugs seized at Welsh ports by customs officers was £3·6 million.

Sundry Payments Account

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what costs relating to hon. Members have been paid out of account HMT 121655999P since 1979; and for what purpose the account is held.

Mr. Nelson: Account HMT 121655999P is a sundry payments account. It is not possible to check records as far back as 1979. However, a check has been made of all records back to 1989. Apart from a payment of £4,700, to Peter Carter-Ruck and Partners, the only payments from this account which relate to hon. Members are for the purchase of minor items of stationery for Ministers' offices, which over the three years from 1989-90 to 1991-92 amounted to some £289. Payments in the current year to date amount to £54.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he has taken to ensure that the Inland Revenue "Investigations Interview Manual", filed in the Library under reference 8177, is sufficiently widely available to all those who need professional access to it.

Mr. Lamont: The version currently issued to trainee inspectors is available from the Inland Revenue at Room 3, New Wing, Somerset House, London WC2R 1LB. I have today placed a copy of this version in the Library.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what inheritance tax changes are proposed for the new London International Financial Futures and Options Exchange.

Mr. Dorrell: The only market makers who qualify for inheritance tax business relief and the option to pay inheritance tax on business assets by interest free instalments at present are those on the stock exchange. New regulations will be made to extend these reliefs with effect from 23 March 1992 to traders performing similar functions in relation to financial futures and options on the London international financial futures and options exchange.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average value of inheritances in (i) Pendle, (ii) Lancashire and (iii) England for each year since 1985.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

The average value of inheritances other than of surviving spouses and excluding all inheritances of under £1,000 in England in the years 1985 to 1989 is estimated at £14,700. Figures for individual years are subject to too large a margin of uncertainty to be meaningful. Information about inheritances in Pendle and Lancashire is not available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fisheries Pollution

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take to apply the income from fines imposed on those who pollute water to the restoration of polluted fisheries.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

Revenue from fines imposed by the courts is not available to the National Rivers Authority. The authority is however already able to recoup from those responsible the cost of dealing with polluted incidents and, where appropriate, to apply the costs to the restoration of affected fisheries.

HEALTH

Subfertility

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the availability of treatments for subfertility through the NHS; and what action she is taking to ensure the provision of a comprehensive service.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service provides a wide range of treatments for subfertility. Decisions about the resources to be made available for these services must be left to individual health authorities as they are in the best position to determine priorities in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Advice is available to health authorities and clinicians in two recent publications:

(a) The "Effective Health Care Bulletin" on management of subfertility, published for the NHS Management Executive by a consortium of Leeds and York Universities and the Research Unit of the Royal College of Physicians.

(b) The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists publication "Infertility—Guidelines for Practice".

Copies are available in the Library.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the accuracy of the waiting list information on the numbers waiting for hospital treatment.

Mr. Sackville: Individual hospitals are responsible for the accuracy of waiting lists. To assist in this, last year, the Royal College of Surgeons issued good practice guidance on waiting list management to clinicians and the Department of Health issued complementary guidance to managers.

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons she had decided not to exemplify a distribution based on the present standard spending assessment with the elderly residential component fully calculated and the resulting population redirected to originating authority using the national health service central register origination data as a basis for assumptions regarding the distribution of community care funding after April 1993.

Mr. Yeo: It was not considered appropriate to do so.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 77, if she will indicate what proportion of the further additional funding for community care support and other service costs for 1993-94 is expected to meet each of the identified elements.

Mr. Yeo: Authorities have differing priorities for their allocation of the community care special transitional grant and it would not be appropriate to give a break down of the allocation of the additional £140 million.

Home Helps

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the percentage increase in the number of home helps in England from 1979 to 1992.

Mr. Yeo: The latest available information shows that the number of home helps (whole time equivalents) rose from 44,600 in September 1979 to 53,450 at 30 September 1991. This represents an increase of 20 per cent.

Private Ambulance Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce regulations to govern the operation of private ambulance services; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I have no such plans.

Wessex RHA (Dr. Cox)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will require the Wessex regional health authority to publish the full text of the statement made by the authority on Friday 20 November in connection with its employment of Dr. Cox.

(2) what conditions were imposed by the Wessex regional health authority on Friday 20 November, in deciding to allow Dr. Cox to return to work at the Royal Hampshire county hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: The conditions imposed by the Wessex regional health authority in deciding to allow Dr. Cox to return to work at the Royal Hampshire county hospital were set out in the authority's statement issued on 20 November 1992.

Homeless Mentally Ill

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in the implementation of the initiative announced in July 1990 for tackling the problem of the homeless mentally ill in London; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Considerable progress has been made. Four short term hostels have been opened and two more will open during 1993, providing 73 places in all. A further 77 hostel places are planned for the next phase of the initiative.

Five community psychiatric teams have been established. The work of the teams and client outcomes are being evaluated independently. The indications are that the teams have been effective in making contact with severely damaged individuals who have had little or no previous contact with psychiatric services. Numbers of contacts to date are estimated at 1,700.

The Housing Corporation has undertaken to secure up to 750 move on places for mentally ill people in re-lets of existing housing association stock and new-build, ranging from independent single units to more supported shared accommodation.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest estimates for the number of homeless mentally ill who are sleeping rough in (a) London, (b) Birmingham, (c) Manchester, (d) Leeds and (e) Bristol.

Mr. Yeo: It is difficult to obtain accurate data on homeless people. On the 1991 census night the following numbers of people were found to be sleeping in the open air on sites previously identified by local statutory and voluntary organisations.

	Numbers
(a) Greater London	1,275
(b) Birmingham	[1]—
(c) Manchester	23
(d) Leeds	21
(e) Bristol	128

[1] Not available.

We estimate that at least 30 per cent., and possibly up to 50 per cent., of homeless people living rough on the streets have a mental health problem.

Intentional Deaths of Patients

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given by her Department to medical, nursing and ancillary personnel about their rights and obligations when they become aware that medical personnel are seeking to take steps intentionally to bring about the death of patients in their care.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. The rights and obligations of professional personnel in relation to such matters are covered by guidance and codes of conduct and ethics issued by the professional bodies.

Mental Illness (Deaths)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made with the confidential inquiry into homicides and suicides by mentally ill people; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: A director and steering committee have been appointed. Terms of reference have been established both for the scope of the inquiry and for the steering committee.

Work is in hand to establish confidential working arrangements by which the inquiry may proceed.

London Health Services

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate she has made of the capital cost of hospital investment in London resulting from the recommendations of the Tomlinson report; and what provision has been made for this expenditure in public expenditure plans;

(2) what estimate she has made of the cost of transfer or redundancy pay for doctors displaced as a result of the recommendations of the Tomlinson report; and what provision has been made for this expenditure in public expenditure plans;

(3) what assessment she has made of the validity of the estimate in the Tomlinson report of the cost of provision of further primary care services in London; and what provision has been made for this expenditure in public expenditure plans.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 3 December 1992]: The capital cost implications of Sir Bernard Tomlinson's recommendations are being studied as part of the Government's consideration of the report. Clearly they are dependent on whatever decisions are made.

We shall put forward our proposals for the future direction of London's health services, including the financial implications, in the new year. At that time we will take full account of the implications of any changes for national health service staff working in London.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which signatories of the non-proliferation treaty are seeking an indefinite extension of the treaty without amendment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We do not know the positions of all signatories of the non-proliferation treaty but in addition to the United Kingdom and its co-depositaries, the United States and the Russian Federation, all G7, European Community and NATO partners have indicated a commitment to seek indefinite extension of the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which states in the Commonwealth of Independent States have signed the non-proliferation treaty; which of these have reached safeguards agreements with the International Atomic Energy Agency; and on what dates these events occurred.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Uzbekistan acceded to the non-proliferation treaty on 7 May 1992. Azerbaijan acceded on 22 September 1992. We understand that neither has yet concluded safeguards agreements with the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which international treaties and arrangements other than the non-proliferation treaty, contribute towards the Government's non-proliferation policies.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Apart from the non-proliferation treaty, the main international treaties which contribute to the Government's non-proliferation policies are: the 1925 Geneva protocol, dealing with chemical weapons, and the 1972 convention on the prohibition of the development, production and stockpiling of bacteriological and toxin weapons and on their destruction (the BTWC). The United Kingdom has also pledged to be an early signatory of the chemical weapons convention, which is likely to enter into force in 1995. There are in addition a number of international arrangements, notably the safeguards administered by the International Atomic Energy Agency and Euratom, and the export controls agreed by COCOM, by the Zangger committee, by the Nuclear Suppliers Group and by the Australia Group. We have also signed and ratified the two additional protocols to the treaty of Tlatelolco which is aimed at creating a nuclear weapons free zone in Latin America. The United Kingdom is also a founder member of the missile technology control regime which controls the transfer of missile systems capable of delivering nuclear, biological and chemical warheads.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has relating to the possession of nuclear weapons by (a) Israel, (b) Iran and (c) Syria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no information either to confirm or deny the rumours that Israel may have nuclear weapons. We continue to emphasise the importance we attach to Israeli accession to the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons. As states parties to this treaty both Iran and Syria have undertaken formal commitments not to acquire nuclear weapons which we expect them to honour in full. However, the experience with Iraq has demonstrated that membership of the non-proliferation treaty alone is no longer a guarantee of non-proliferation. We therefore take every opportunity both bilaterally and in international fora to stress the significance we attack to all states parties to the NPT complying fully with all their obligations.

IAEA

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which states have made a commitment to the International Atomic Energy Agency to open any site and any installation on their territory to visits from Agency inspectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We understand that the following states have indicated to the IAEA that they would allow unrestricted access to any sites the agency may wish to visit: Iran, North Korea, South Africa.

Nuclear Materials (Theft)

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 3 November, Official Report, column 173, what information he has about the original source of the stolen nuclear material that has recently been seized in Italy and Germany; what discussions he has had with his European and NATO counterparts on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Release of information on the source of the material recovered in these incidents is a matter for the Italian and German authorities. We discuss the general isue of illicit trade in nuclear materials with other European and NATO counterparts as appropriate, most recently at NATO's ad hoc group on nuclear weapons on 16 November.

Civil Servants

92. Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many civil servants from each wing of his Department have been relocated from London to other parts of the United Kingdom (a) in the last five years and (b) in the last 10 years; and to where they were relocated.

Mr. Goodlad: Since 1988, 97 diplomatic wing posts have been relocated to Hanslope park, near Milton Keynes. In the same period the aid wing has relocated 53 jobs to East Kilbride and 321 to Chatham. No relocations took place in the previous five years; 427 posts from the aid wing had already, however, been moved from London to East Kilbride in 1981.

Nuclear Suppliers Group

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 3 November, Official Report, column 169, on the Nuclear Suppliers Group, what consideration the working group on institutional questions established by the Nuclear Suppliers Group has given to the inclusion of China as a member of the group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave on 3 November at col. 169. The proceedings of the working group on institutional questions like all meetings of the Nuclear Suppliers Group are confidential. If China were to seek membership of the group, their application would be carefully considered.

Nuclear Tests (South Asia)

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communications he has had with NATO, Indian, Pakistani and Chinese counterparts relating to the conduct of nuclear tests in the south Asia region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We are not aware of any nuclear explosion in South Asia since India exploded a nuclear device in 1974, and we have not recently discussed nuclear testing in this region.

US National Security Agency

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the locations from which the United States National Security Agency is permitted to operate in Britain.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It remains the policy of Her Majesty's Government not to answer questions of this nature.

EC Council of Ministers

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community's Council of Ministers.

11. The Fisheries Council is due to meet on 19 and 20 December. Fisheries Ministers may discuss fishing opportunities for 1993 including total allowable catches (TACs) and quotas; fishing arrangements for European Community vessels to fish Spanish and Portuguese waters; fisheries agreements with Norway, Sweden and Greenland; the NAFO TACs and quotas; the third country agreement with French Guyana; the European Community system for fisheries and aquaculture and accession arrangements for Spain and Portugal.

12. The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 21 December to discuss the follow-up to the European Council; EC/Morocco; the former Yugoslavia and any other EPC items. The GATT: Uruguay round and oilseeds may also be discussed. The EC/Cyprus Association Council will be held in the margins.

Cameroon

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the conduct of the presidential elections in Cameroon on 11 October.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Whilst we welcome the holding of multi-party elections as an important step in the process of democratisation, we noted with concern that the conduct of the recent election was flawed and that the primary responsibility for the shortcomings rests with the Government of Cameroon. In the light of the widespread dissatisfaction with the outcome inside Cameroon, we have urged the Government strongly to begin a process of national reconciliation among political parties.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Military Exports

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral statement of 23 November, Official Report, column 644, what is the value of export guarantees for the supply of defence-related goods, including machine tools, to Iraq that have had to be called in the past eight years.

Mr. Heseltine: I will write to the hon. Lady in due course.

Timber

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has about the extent of illegal trade in timber from the rain forest countries of South-Eash Asia.

Mr. Needham: Authoritative information about the extent of illegal harvesting and exports of timber from the rain forest countries of South East Asia is limited. I have, however, been sent a copy of a report on such matters by the TRAFFIC Network, which was published with the support of the World Wide Fund for Nature.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what international agreements supported by Britain relate to the international trade in timber;

(2) what steps are being taken by the United Kingdom Government to ensure that all United Kingdom imports of timber are derived from legally felled forests and are traded legally.

Mr. Needham: The Government's policy on timber is to encourage the sustainable management of forests. We support the International Tropical Timber Organisation's target for all internationally traded timber to originate from sustainably managed forests by 2000. Except as provided for under the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species there are no restrictions on the import of tropical hardwoods into the United Kingdom; wider restrictions would be neither practicable nor desirable.

Mahogany (Brazil)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what requests the United Kingdom Government have received from the Government of Brazil for assistance in helping to control illegal harvesting of mahogany in the states of Rondonia and Para.

Mr. Needham: I am not aware of any requests from the Government of Brazil for assistance in controlling illegal harvesting of mahogany.

Trade Balance

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out in real terms the balance of trade between the United Kingdom and other members of the EC in each year since 1972.

Mr. Needham: Information on United Kingdom trade in real terms by trading partner is not available. Data in current prices are published in the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics, CSO", which is available in the Library of the House.

EC Investment

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out in real terms (a) United Kingdom investment in other EC countries and (b) investment in the United Kingdom from other EC countries in each year since 1972.

Mr. Salisbury: Information on United Kingdom inward and outward investment in real terms is not available. Statistics on investment in current prices are published in "Business Monitor MA4, Overseas Transactions", which is available in the Library of the House.

Inward Investment

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what is the total amount of inward investment the north west of England has received in the last 10 years, year by year;

(2) what measures are being taken to attract inward investment to the north west of England.

Mr. Salisbury: My Department's Invest in Britain Bureau promotes the whole of the United Kingdom as an attractive location for overseas inward investors. In 1992-93 it provided grant-in-aid of £1,112,000 to INWARD to undertake overseas inward investment promotional activities for the north-west region.

The table shows the number of inward investment projects and the associated jobs which the north-west has received in the last 10 years.

Year	Project	New jobs	Total jobs[1]
1982	14	1,291	1,291
1983	22	709	1,823
1984	40	1,135	3,046
1985	28	2,271	3,649
1986	34	1,400	2,789
1987	28	1,323	6,219
1988	30	1,763	5,607
1989	52	2,646	7,184
1990	53	1,810	10,507
1991	65	1,373	8,945
Total	366	15,721	51,060

[1] Total jobs includes jobs associated with acquisitions and with investments creating new jobs where existing jobs were considered to be safeguarded by the investment.

Note: The figures are based on information provided by the companies themselves as notified to DTI's Invest in Britain Bureau and reflect the companies' intentions at the time of the decision to invest and take no account of subsequent developments.

Coal Review

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those individuals and organisations which have made submissions to his review of the coal industry and identify those submissions which are confidential; and if he will place the remainder in the Library.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 3 December 1992]: The individuals and organisations who have submitted evidence to the coal review, and whose evidence has been received by the review team at 5.30 pm on 3 December, are listed and total 277 submissions. Those whose submissions include confidential material are marked with an asterisk. Copies of the evidence which is not confidential are being placed in the Library.

Mr. Carrington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the coal contract negotiations between British Coal and the electricity supply industry following the coal review he announced on 21 October.

Mr. Heseltine: I wrote to the chairman of British Coal yesterday in the following terms:

You asked for my views on British Coal's contract negotiations with the electricity supply industry following the Review I announced on 21 October.

As you know, in my statement to the House on 21 October, I announced a wide-ranging Review of the prospects of the 21 pits proposed for closure but not subject to statutory consultation. The Review will decide whether the case for closure of each of the 21 pits has been fully made and whether it is sensible to mothball any of these pits. I also made it clear that the Review would consider whether the market prospects for coal had been correctly assessed, and that it would look at the level of coal stocks, both at the pithead and at the power stations, and whether plans to run them down were sensibly phased.

The Review will consider views and evidence on the future of each of the pits in question, in the context of the Government's energy policy, including the consequences of that policy for British Coal and employment prospects for the industry. The Review will decide whether the case for closure at each of the pits in question had been fully made and whether the market prospects for coal have been correctly assessed.

The future of the British coal industry depends crucially on the level of its sales to the power generators. The Corporation's current coal supply contracts with National Power and PowerGen for 65 million tonnes expire on 31 March 1993. British Coal's proposals to close 31 pits reflected the assessment that you were unlikely to sell the power generators more than 40 million tonnes of coal in 1993-94. The Government's decision to launch the Review was taken against the background, among other factors, of widespread concern and representations that there could be a market for substantially higher tonnages.

Negotiations on future contracts are of course a matter for the coal and electricity industries. However, against the background to the Review, and the deep Parliamentary and public concern about its outcome, I hope that British Coal and the other parties to the contract negotiations will find it possible to agree arrangements which will ensure a sound and stable basis for the British coal industry and the electricity supply industry to plan their business at least for 1993-94, and pending implementation of options identified in the light of the Review of the prospects of the 21 pits.

I am looking to all the parties concerned to ensure that any contracts which may be agreed do not prejudice the outcome of the Review.

I am therefore copying this letter to National Power and PowerGen and the twelve regional electricity companies so that they are aware of the Government's views. I am also sending a copy to the Chairman of the Select Committee on Trade and Industry and proposing to make it available to MPs through a written statement and to issue a press notice.

British Steel

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what evidence he has provided to the United States Government about subsidies paid to British Steel; and by what sums British Steel is currently subsidised.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government and United Kingdom companies complied with the United States authorities' requests for information on subsidies to the British Steel Corporation as part of a recent investigation under United States countervailing duty legislation. No Government subsidies have been granted to British Steel since the company was privatised in 1988.

Electricity Imports

Mr. Churchill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the price paid to date to Electricité de France in respect of electricity imports in each month for the term of the present contract, together with the prevailing pool price in each of those months.

Mr. Eggar: This is a commercial matter for those electricity companies that have contracts with EdF.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the proportion of energy supplies for electricity generation that are likely to be imported by 2020 based on the forecast contained in the DTI Energy Paper 59, October 1992, entitled "Electricity Generated by Type of Plant" (per cent), (a) overall, (b) coal, (c) gas, (d) oil, (e) nuclear and (f) other.

Mr. Eggar: Energy Paper 59 is primarily intended to offer a range of energy-related carbon emissions scenarios as a basis for discussion of environmental issues. Because the carbon contents of domestic and imported fuels are similar the scenarios do not distinguish between them.

Imported Coal

Mr. Churchill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the tonnages of imported coal (a) for power generation, (b) for industrial applications and (c) for domestic use, in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar: The figures requested are:

Thousand tonnes

Year	[1] Power generation	[2] [3] Industry applications	[3] Domestic use
1987	1,358	6,945	1,478
1988	1,973	7,709	2,003
1989	1,963	8,497	1,677
1990	4,721	8,964	1,098
1991	7,251	9,863	2,376

[1] Major electricity generating companies as defined in Energy Trends.
[2] Including coke ovens and manufactured solid fuel plants.
[3] These are estimated figures based on data supplied by Customs and Excise. The use of which the coal is to be put is not recorded at the time the coal is imported, but assumptions on who uses particular types of coal have been used to allocate imports to the industrial and domestic sectors.

Public Interest Immunity

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for how many documents Her Majesty's Government have claimed public interest immunity in respect of the application in the High Court by the NUM on pit closures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 30 November 1992]: None. On 26 November 1992 counsel acting on my right hon. Friend's behalf in these proceedings properly drew attention of the court to the fact that two documents which had recently been submitted in evidence by the National Union of Mineworkers and which were already in the public domain fell within an established class of document capable of attracting public interest immunity. The question of whether the documents should attract such immunity was left entirely to the court which subsequently decided that they should be allowed as evidence.

Manufacturing

Mr. Turner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give greater priority to manufacturing companies in the distribution of grant-assisted aid for development and expansion purposes.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 2 December 1992]: Around three quarters of my Department's programme spend goes to manufacturing companies.

Trade Deficit

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current United Kingdom trade deficit with (a) France, (b) Italy, (c) the Netherlands, (d) Germany and (e) Belgium respectively; and what is the total deficit in trade between the United Kingdom and all other EC countries.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 2 December 1992]: Information on United Kingdom visible trade with members of the EC is regularly published in the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics, CSO", which is available in the Library of the House.

Market Share

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the European Community share in the United Kingdom market for the financial year 1990-91; and what is the estimated share for 1991-92.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 2 December 1992]: Information on the EC shares of the United Kingdom domestic market cannot be provided without disproportionate cost. The EC accounted for 52 per cent. of visible imports into the United Kingdom in 1990-91 and in 1991-92. The EC share of United Kingdom imports of manufactures was 55 per cent. in 1990-91 and 54 per cent. in 1991-92.

Libyan Sanctions

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate has been made of the effect on the United Kingdom balance of payments of Libyan sanctions.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 2 December 1992]: It is impossible to say what additional trade might have occurred or the effect on the United Kingdom balance of payments—if sanctions against Libya had not been adopted by the United Nations Security Council.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 7 December 1992

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to ensure an equal representation of women on the Bench.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's policy is to appoint to judicial office those best qualified, regardless of sex, ethnic origin, political affiliation or religion. Without prejudice to this overriding principle, the Lord Chancellor has stressed publicly, and will continue to do so, that he would like to see more female legal practitioners who are suitably qualified appointed to the judiciary. The composition of the judiciary at any one time must inevitably reflect the composition of the legal profession within the relevant categories of age and seniority, but, as the proportion of women at these levels in the profession increases, so this is likely to be reflected on the Bench. Two women have been appointed to the High Court Bench this year and women are being appointed in greater numbers at other levels of the judiciary. The Lord Chancellor has ensured appropriate flexibility, for example related to women who have taken career breaks. He has asked that women candidates be included, wherever possible, in the list of those under consideration for appointment. He has co-operated with the Bar in research into sex equality at the Bar and in the judiciary, and will be studying the resultant findings and recommendations. Women represent 45 per cent. of the lay magistracy and the Lord Chancellor's aim is to achieve equality of sittings between male and female magistrates.

Contract Law

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has to implement the recommendation of Law Commission report No. 174 on privity of contract law and estates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor is actively considering the recommendations of the Law Commission on this subject and hopes to be able to make an announcement about this report in the near future.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Extradition (Ireland)

31. Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Attorney-General when he last met his Irish counterpart; and what matters were discussed concerning extradition.

The Attorney-General: The last meeting on this subject took place in Dublin on 21 and 22 July this year. It is not the practice to comment on the detail of our discussions.

Ministerial Responsibilities

32. Mr. Macklaay: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the division of his work between his role as Law Officer and his other governmental responsibilities.

The Attorney-General: As Attorney-General I am the principal legal adviser to the Government. I also act, wholly independently of the Government, to enforce the law on behalf of the general community in the public interest.

Sunday Trading

33. Mr. Michael: To ask the Attorney-General what is his current advice to local authorities on the enforcement of the legislation governing Sunday trading.

The Attorney-General: I informed the House on 11 May in answering questions from the hon. Member for Cardiff, Central (Mr. Jones), at columns 367-68, that local authorities can still issue summonses or seek injunctions. It is for them to consider what action to take in a particular case.

Serious Fraud Office (Staff)

34. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Attorney-General what is the current number of staff in the Serious Fraud Office; and what productivity targets have been set.

The Solicitor-General: The Serious Fraud Office presently employs 132 permanent staff as well as additional temporary staff to meet the varying demands of its caseload. Ninety-one police officers are on attachment.

The main performance target is that the period between the acceptance of a case and its transfer or committal to the Crown court should not exceed 12 months.

Crown Prosecution Service (Vacancies)

35. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Attorney-General how many vacancies there are in the Crown prosecution service for solicitors.

The Solicitor General: The Crown prosecution service currently has 159 vacancies for lawyers out of a total requirement of 2,256

Chancellor's Tenant

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the application of paragraph 25 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" to the civil case involving the Chancellor of the Exchequer; and when Law Officers were informed of the case.

The Attorney-General: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has already informed the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) in a letter of 30 November which has been placed in the Library, of his approach to my predecessor.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

BBC (Restructuring)

10. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the effect of his proposals to restructure the BBC outlined in the Green Paper on the programme output of the corporation.

Mr. Brooke: Our discussion document set out options, but we cannot reach decisions about the BBC's future structure until we are clearer about the services it is to provide.

Football Stadiums

11. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received regarding the implementation of the Taylor report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: My predecessor announced the outcome of the Government's review of its all-seater policy in July. Since then, I have received several letters from hon. Members and from members of the public, and on 26 November my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State met bodies representing football supporters to hear their views. I have no plans to relax the all-seater requirement further.

Sports Clubs (Rating)

12. Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make it his policy to introduce mandatory rate relief for non-profit-making sports clubs.

Mr. Key: No. The present arrangement providing for local authority discretion means that each case can be considered on its merits.

Wootton Creek

13. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the discoveries made in Wootton Creek as a result of funding by his Department.

Mr. Key: The Wootton survey project is still in its early stages, but it is already demonstrating the existence of important prehistoric and later remains in the inter-tidal zone, relating to the use of the coast by maritime trading communities of the Norman, Saxon and medieval periods.

National Lottery

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what estimate he has made of the effect of a national lottery on the revenue raised by the Treasury on the football pools industry.

Mr. Brooke: Matters pertaining to Government revenues are properly a matter for the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Estimates of the effects of the national lottery on the level of pools' turnover are subject to a series of hypotheses. I am aware of the understandable concerns on Merseyside and am looking forward to a meeting next week with the Pools Promoters Association.

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions have taken place between himself and the Sports Council on the funds available for sport from a national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: I have not discussed this subject specifically with the Sports Council, although officials have discussed with the council funds likely to be available for sport.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his estimate of the revenue that will be raised for the Exchequer through the introduction of a national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: That will depend upon the size of the national lottery's turnover, and on taxation. The prime purpose of the national lottery is to raise additional funds for the arts, sport, the heritage and charities.

Arts Funding

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what value he attaches to the arm's-length principle of arts funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The "arms-length" principle, under which Governments distance themselves from decisions on the funding of individual arts organisations, has been a central part of arts funding since the creation of the Arts Council. I expect to see it continued.

Public Libraries

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many books were borrowed from public libraries in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Key: The total number of books borrowed from public libraries in 1990-91—the last year for which figures are available—was 563 million, of which 475 million of these were lent from public libraries in England, for which I am responsible.

Overseas Visitors

18. Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many overseas visitors came to the United Kingdom in 1991.

Mr. Key: There were an estimated 16·7 million visits to the United Kingdom by overseas residents in 1991. Inward tourism was badly affected by the Gulf war and the recession in the USA. The number of visitors so far this year is well up on 1991, though not quite back to the record levels achieved in 1990.

Rugby League Football

19. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on his policy towards rugby league football.

Mr. Brooke: The Government's role is to support and encourage the development of and participation in all sports including rugby league football, with most funding channelled through the Sports Council. In 1991-92, the council provided £160,000 to the British Amateur Rugby League Association—BARLA—and £12,000 to the English Schools Rugby League for the development of the game. In addition, over the past year, the Foundation for Sport and the Arts has provided over £750,000 in grant aid to rugby league clubs for various projects.

The Sports Council is also involved in promoting discussions between BARLA and the Rugby Football League about the creation of a unified governing body for rugby league.

Regional Orchestras

20. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement concerning support for regional orchestras.

Mr. Brooke: Detailed funding decisions are, of course, the responsibility of the Arts Council and regional arts boards. Support for regional orchestras ranges widely, from the more than £6 million the Arts Council gives the major orchestras to smaller-scale grants to local amateur orchestras.

Broadcasting Green Paper

21. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received on his Green Paper on broadcasting.

Mr. Brooke: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave earlier today to the question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham).

Libraries and Theatres (Greater Manchester)

22. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will visit libraries and theatres in Greater Manchester to discuss resources.

Mr. Key: I am always delighted to visit local authorities in connection with my ministerial responsibilities. I have already visited Manchester to see one of its theatres and Chetham's library but would welcome further invitations to libraries and theatres in Greater Manchester. My Department has no direct responsibility for the resources provided for these services, although it must ensure that a comprehensive and efficient library service is provided.

Minority Languages and Cultures

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he last met his ministerial colleagues representing other member states of the European Community to discuss matters relating to the protection and development of minority and indigenous languages and cultures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have met European Community Culture Ministers specifically to discuss the position of lesser-used languages and minority cultures. I last met my EC ministerial colleagues in Brussels when I chaired the Culture Council on 12 November. Lesser-used languages were not on the agenda of that meeting, although mention of minority cultures was made during discussion of a Community-wide campaign to raise public awareness of books and reading which the Danish presidency intends to launch next year. Lesser-used languages and minority cultures were also mentioned, during wider discussions, when I attended a meeting of Culture Ministers under the aegis of the Council of Europe in Paris on 15 and 16 October.

Fine Arts Heritage

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to strengthen the ability of national institutions to retain the fine arts heritage in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Brooke: My hon. Friend is familiar with the Government's existing policies to encourage the retention of the nation's important works of art. These include the Waverley system of export controls, important tax concessions, and grants to national museums and galleries and to the National Heritage Memorial Fund. These policies continue to assist national museums and galleries to acquire major works by important artists.

Tourist Boards (Finance)

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the percentage of finance in local tourist boards provided by (a) the English tourist board, (b) local government and (c) the private sector.

Mr. Key: Funding for the regional tourist boards for the 1991-92 financial year was:

	Per cent.
(a) English Tourist Board	30·5
(b) Local Authorities	8·5
(c) Private Sector	61·0

Windsor Castle (Fire)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the cost of repairs at Windsor castle.

Mr. Brooke: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to the question from the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner).

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations the Government received from the Fire Prevention Association concerning the protection of the national heritage from fire; and what subsequent action was taken in respect of Windsor castle.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 3 December 1992]: In October 1991 the Fire Protection Association published a report, "Heritage under Fire", on fire safety in historic buildings. The report was published on behalf of the United Kingdom working party on fire safety in historic buildings, on which the Government and English Heritage were represented. No specific subsequent action was taken in respect of Windsor castle, as a comprehensive programme of fire prevention measures had already been set in hand at the castle.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what contributions he estimates will be forthcoming for the restoration of Windsor castle from (a) the private sector, (b) insurance companies and (c) sources other than public funds.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 27 November 1992]: It is not possible to make any such estimates at the present time.

Royal Palaces

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what action the Historic Royal Palaces Agency takes to train and retain craftsmen with skills necessary for the restoration of royal palaces.

Mr. Key: The Historic Royal Palaces Agency does not employ its own craftsmen. The agency's experience is that craftsmen of the highest quality continue to be available in private firms.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list those royal palaces that have sprinkler systems installed as a fire precaution.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 3 December 1992]: Sprinkler systems have not been installed as a fire precaution at any of the royal palaces.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will arrange for full fire safety inspections at all royal residences in receipt of public funds.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 27 November 1992]: Fire safety inspections are made regularly at each of the occupied royal palaces.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what has been the total cost to public funds arising from the upkeep of each of the royal residences in each of the last three financial years.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 27 November 1992]: The resources provided for the maintenance of each of the royal residences over the last three years is as follows:

£ million

	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Windsor Castle	7·1	9·8	9·3
Buckingham Palace	3·0	1·5	5·2
St. James's Palace	0·8	1·3	2·5
Kensington Palace	1·1	0·3	0·7

Tourism

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the total expenditure in England on section 4 grants for tourism-related projects in the last full year for which figures are available.

Mr. Key: The expenditure on section 4 grants in England in the 1991-92 financial year was £600,000.

BBC Archives

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will review the restrictive covenants covering all BBC archives when he is considering the terms under which the BBC's charter will be renewed; and if he will consider whether amending legislation is necessary to ensure that the provisions of European Community restraint of trade legislation are observed by any interests seeking to impose restraints on the use of BBC archives.

Mr. Brooke: The BBC's contractual agreements are a matter for the corporation. The use of the BBC's programme archives and other assets, including the relevance of any EC legislation, is an issue for the debate about the corporation's future.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

UNESCO

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to which programme activities of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation he intends to contribute in the coming year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no plans at present to contribute in the coming year to any programme activities of UNESCO through its regular budget. However, the United Kingdom retains its membership of certain inter-governmental bodies which come under UNESCO auspices. We expect to contribute to the World Heritage Fund, the inter-governmental Oceanographic Commission, and the universal copyright convention in the forthcoming year.

Colombia

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Colombian Government about the use of children in coal mines in the Boyaca region.

Mr. Garel-Jones: None. We understand that the Colombian authorities, who are well aware of the concern felt in this country, wish to close illegal mines using child labour.

Hong Kong

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps were taken, since April 1992, to discuss the extension of democracy in Hong Kong before 1997 with the Chinese Government in advance of the Governor's published statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We have repeatedly told the Chinese side of our wish to see a faster pace of democratisation in Hong Kong by increasing the number of seats in the Legislative Council beyond that envisaged in the Basic Law. But the Chinese position has been that the Basic Law cannot be changed. We and the Governor therefore developed a parallel approach, consistent with the Basic Law. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs briefed the Chinese Foreign Minister on this approach in New York on 25 September, two weeks before the Governor's speech. The Governor sent a message in parallel to senior Chinese officials in Peking.

Visitors' Visas

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the number of appeals in the last 12 months against refusal of visitors' visas to people visiting in order to visit relatives or friends in Birmingham.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is not centrally recorded and could not be provided except at disproportionate expense.

Kashmir

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are his foreign policy objectives with regard to Kashmir; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our policy is to encourage the Governments of India and Pakistan to agree a means of settling their dispute over Kashmir as provided for in the 1972 Simla agreement; to emphasise the importance of a genuine political process in Kashmir in which the aspirations of the population in Kashmir can be accommodated, an improvement on human rights there; and to call for a clear cessation of any support from outside for violence within Kashmir.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make further representations regarding the Kashmiri people to the Indian Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We take every opportunity to discuss the situation in Kashmir with the Indian Government. They are fully aware of our concerns about human rights abuses by security forces there and the need for a genuine political process within Kashmir.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the extent of the freedom of the press in Kashmir.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are not aware of any restrictions on access to Kashmir by Indian or foreign journalists, or on their reporting on the situation there.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to use opportunities within the United Nations to progress a positive and peaceful solution to the problems of Kashmir.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We do not expect that, given the known positions of India and Pakistan, such opportunities are likely to arise.

Chemical Weapons Convention

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much notice must be provided by states parties before access must be granted (a) to declared facilities and (b) undeclared facilities under the challenge inspection provisions of article IX of the chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under the challenge inspection provisions of article IX of the chemical weapons convention, access must be permitted no later than 120 hours for undeclared facilities, and 100 hours for declared facilities, after notice of inspection has been provided by states parties.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what allowances have been made for the retention of disabling agents for riot control purposes under the terms of the chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under the terms of the convention, states parties will be entitled to use toxic chemicals for law enforcement, including domestic riot control purposes, provided that such chemicals are limited to those not listed in the schedules to the convention and which can produce rapidly in humans sensory irritation or disabling physical effects which disappear within a short time following termination of exposure. States parties will undertake not to use riot control agents as a method of warfare.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial and personnel resources will be made available to ensure commercial compliance with the terms of the chemical weapons convention in the United Kingdom; and if custodial sentences may be applied to any individuals in the commercial chemical industry found to be in serious breach of the terms of the chemical weapons convention in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Her Majesty's Government will give detailed consideration to issues relating to the implementation of the convention after its signature. The convention will not enter into force before 1995.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the transparency of the operation of the chemical weapons convention preparatory commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The rules of procedure of the preparatory commission have yet to be drawn up. Her Majesty's Government are therefore not yet in a position to make a firm decision on its policy towards the transparency of the operation of the commission.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department will publish the draft rules of procedure for the preparatory commission before states-signatories to the chemical weapons convention formally adopt them following the signing of the convention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The rules of procedure for the preparatory commission have yet to be drawn up. Any decision on whether such rules should be made public before being formally adopted will be for all states involved in drawing them up.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what resources will be made available to the Scientific Advisory Board of Independent Experts to review the scientific and technological developments that could affect the operation of the chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It will be for the conference of states parties of the chemical weapons convention to decide what resources will be made available to the scientific advisory board.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations will take place between the chemical weapons convention preparatory commission and representatives of the scientific community and chemical industry regarding the establishment of the organisation for the prohibition of chemical weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It will be for the preparatory commission of the chemical weapons convention to decide what consultations it may have with representatives of the scientific community and the chemical industry.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16 November, Official Report, column 47, if the United Kingdom will be an original signatory of the chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom fully intends to be an original signatory of the chemical weapons convention.

Iraq

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) on what date Her Majesty's Government last made representations to the United Nations special commission of inspection on Iraq;

(2) on what dates Her Majesty's Government have received requests for information and assistance from the United Nations special commission of inspection on Iraq; and on what dates the Government responded to those requests.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government have worked closely with the United Nations special commission on Iraq—UNSCOM—since it was set up in April 1991. The United Kingdom mission to the United Nations is in almost daily contact with UNSCOM.

COCOM

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's present policy towards the co-ordinating committee on multilateral strategic export controls (COCOM), indicating if any changes are in prospect.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As indicated in the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 5 June at column 673, the present policy of all countries participating in the co-ordinating committee on multilateral export controls is to provide those proscribed destinations that have embarked on political reform with progressively wider access to COCOM-controlled goods and technology, as they establish effective export controls. To this end, an informal co-operation forum on export controls has been established: its first meeting was held in Paris on 23 and 24 November.

Coffins

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he proposes to ensure that coffins used to repatriate, for cremation, the remains of British nationals from Spain, comply with EEC directive 84/360.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply. There are no requirements in EEC directive 84/360 as to the type or composition of coffins for cremation.

TRANSPORT

King's Cross Fire

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made by London Transport in implementing the recommendations of the Fennel report into the King's Cross underground fire.

Mr. Norris: London Transport has fully implemented 106 out of 127 recommendations addressed to it and has partially completed a further 12. One recommendation was not accepted by LT, but its objective has been achieved through other means. Work on implementing the remainder is progressing well. A copy of London Transport's detailed report on progress up to the end of August has been placed in the Library.

Nuclear Material (Transport)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what modes of transport (a) plutonium, (b) enriched uranium and (c) natural uranium are transported (i) within, (ii) into and (iii) from the United Kingdom; and if he will name in each case the ports used.

Mr. Norris: By land, sea and air. The consignors choose the mode, and port when needed.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide details of the nature and quantity of irradiated nuclear fuel, plutonium and high-level radioactive waste transported by sea to and from, or by, the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Norris: This information is not held by the Department.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the air freighting of fresh plutonium-bearing nuclear fuel pins from Germany to Dounreay in Scotland.

Mr. Norris: None.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, (1) pursuant to his answer of 24 November, Official Report, column 561, if he will set out the names of the persons with details of their expertise, who will represent Her Majesty's Government at the International Atomic Energy Agency-International Maritime Organisation-United Nations Environment Programme working group on the transport of irradiated nuclear fuel;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 24 November, Official Report, column 561, if he will name the specialists in the transport of irradiated nuclear fuel who will be representing him at the forthcoming joint International Atomic Energy Authority-International Maritime Organisation-United Nations Environment Programme working group meeting.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department will be represented by: Mr. K. James, a chartered engineer with 28 years' experience in the transport of hazardous material by sea, chairman of the IMO's sub-committee on the carriage of dangerous goods—CDG; Mr. C. K. Wilson, a physicist specialising in criticality safety and radiological protection with 10 years' experience regulating the transport of radioactive materials; Mr. C. N. Young, a chartered engineer with 14 years' experience in the regulation of radioactive material transport, chairman of the IMO's CDG working group on class 7 dangerous goods—radioactive materials.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department routinely collects and stores centrally on the import and export of nuclear materials by different transport modes to and from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department routinely collects that information which is required by the International Atomic Energy Agency publication "Safety Series No. 6: Regulations for the Safe Transport of Radioactive Material", a copy of which is held in the Library of the House.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evaluation his Department has made of any of the safety standards set by the International Atomic Energy Agency for the international transport of (a) plutonium, (b) enriched uranium, (c) natural uranium and (d) radioactive waste.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department is involved in the evaluation of the safety standards for the transport of all radioactive materials on an ongoing basis and is a major contributor to the International Atomic Energy Agency's programme of review and revision of its international regulations.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the advisory committee on the safe transport of radioactive materials; and what matters were discussed and decided.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This committee was disbanded on 31 January 1989.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's policy in regard to evaluation of independent reports published on the transport of nuclear materials.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: To consider them on their merits.

Railway Equipment Manufacturers

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from railway equipment manufacturers about investment decisions for work during the next six years.

Mr. Freeman: The Railway Industry Association has submitted a copy of its evidence to the Transport Select Committee on the Government's White Paper on BR privatisation. The Steer Davies Gleave report "Rail Privatisation: Attractive Investment or Wishful Thinking" has also been submitted on behalf of the Railway Industry Association, Eurotunnel and Transport 2000. Representations have been received from several individual railway manufacturers and I am meeting the Railway Industry Association on 8 December to discuss prospects for the industry.

General Register and Record Office of Shipping

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to contract out or divide up the General Register and Record Office of Shipping.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 25 November, at column 659.

School Buses

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what account he has taken of (a) parental and school governors' wishes, (b) the particular road conditions of rural areas and (c) road safety in his policy on carrying three children on a double school bus seat; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The regulations governing the carrying capacity of public service vehicles permit three seated children under 14, sharing a double seat to count as two passengers. This is a concession and they do not have to be seated in this manner. These regulations apply throughout the country and it would not be practicable to have regional variations to take account of particular road conditions. Buses and coaches are the safest form of road passenger transport in this country, even where children are seated three to a double seat.

We are continuing to review these regulations and will take account of the wishes of parents and others. For the present, I have no plans to amend them.

Disabled Passengers

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what will be the expected annual saving to the Exchequer arising from the repeal of the vehicle excise duty exemption under the disabled passengers scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I understand the saving will be in the region of £440,000, in the first year, based on the approximate annual number of new applications.

Current beneficiaries under this scheme will not lose their entitlement to exemption from vehicle excise duty as a result of the repeal.

Traffic Commissioners (North Staffordshire)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the staffing resources available to the traffic commissioners responsible for north Staffordshire.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There are 46·5 permanent staff based at the West Midland traffic area office who provide support for the West Midland traffic commissioner whose geographical area includes north Staffordshire. The staff includes one grade 7 clerk, who is also the clerk of the South Wales traffic area office, two higher executive officers, five executive officers and 38·5 administrative and support staff.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Science and Technology

Sir Giles Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he now intends to publish the White Paper on science and technology.

Mr. Waldegrave: I intend to publish the White Paper in the early part of next year.

Sir Giles Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has for opportunities for further consultation after the publication of the White Paper on science and technology.

Mr. Waldegrave: The White Paper will itself need to address any questions of further consultation. But I would welcome any views which my hon. Friend, who I know is the Chairman of the Select Committee on Science and Technology, may have.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Adley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy that requirements imposed under the citizens charter will continue to be applied to services sold to the private sector.

Mr. Waldegrave: The citizens charter applies to all public services, and, in the private sector, to the main utilities where the regulatory bodies play a key role in protecting customers' interests in accordance with citizens' charter principles and in helping to develop competition. We will continue to appoint regulatory bodies following privatisation where it is in the public interest to do so.

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many civil servants are currently employed by his Department (a) in London and (b elsewhere.

Mr. Waldegrave: Excluding its executive agencies, the Office of Public Service and Science employs 1,430 civil servants, 711 in London and 719 elsewhere, including those who work on a part-time basis.

PRIME MINISTER

Radiation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out the division of responsibilities between each Government Department in investigating the risks posed by exposure to radiation.

The Prime Minister: The Department of Health is responsible in general terms for the protection of public health against radiological hazards. The Department's specific responsibilities relate to obtaining expert advice; initiating relevant research; and ensuring an effective health response in the event of a radiological emergency.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's responsibilities are to protect the population from exposure to unacceptable levels of radioactivity through food chain pathways; and to minimise the impact of radioactive waste on the food, farming and fishing industries and the marine environment.

The Department of Trade and Industry is responsible for civil nuclear safety in relation to the generation of electricity.

The Department of Employment is responsible for the Ionising Radiation Regulations 1985, which concern the protection of workers and the public from radiation doses received as a result of any work involving ionising radiations. On this the Department is advised by the Health and Safety Commission and the regulations are enforced by the Health and Safety Executive.

The Department of the Environment is responsible for establishing a radioactive waste management policy and for monitoring the environment for radioactivity. Within the Department, the regulators—Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution—have the statutory responsibility in England and Wales for authorising uses and disposals of radioactive substances.

The Ministry of Defence is responsible for defence nuclear and radiological safety.

The Department of Transport is responsible for the safety aspects of the transportation of radioactive material.

The Scottish Office, the Welsh Office and the Northern Ireland Office are responsible for all civil aspects of radiological safety in relation to their respective parts of the United Kingdom.

The National Radiological Protection Board is responsible under the Radiological Protection Act 1970 for advancing knowledge of radiological protection and for informing and advising Government Departments and others on protection from radiation hazards.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the Government Departments concerned with the main areas of animal welfare, indicating their respective responsibilities.

The Prime Minister: A number of Government Departments have responsibility for the welfare and conservation of animals and related matters.

The Department of the Environment is responsible for policy on stray dogs; the protection of birds; wildlife and endangered species.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is responsible for the welfare of livestock kept on agricultural land; the welfare of livestock at market and the welfare of horses, cattle, sheep, swine, goats and poultry in slaughterhouses and knackers yards. The Ministry is also involved in the campaign against illegal poisoning of wildlife and in the International Whaling Commission, and has responsibility for the impact of fishing practices on cetaceans.

The Home Office is responsible for ensuring the adequacy of the law on cruelty to animals in general and in some specific areas, and for the law on the use of living animals in scientific procedures.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office works to raise the profile of animal welfare issues abroad, both bilaterally and with international organisations concerned.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister how many representations his office has received on the Maastricht treaty from 1 January to 1 December giving a disaggregated breakdown between those originating in the United Kingdom and those from abroad.

The Prime Minister: I have received a substantial number of representations on the Maastricht treaty covering a wide range of issues.

Legal Expenses Insurance Policies

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Prime Minister if he will require Ministers to take out legal expenses insurance policies.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Freight Traffic

Mr. Adley: To ask the Prime Minister if it remains his Government's policy to seek the transfer of freight traffic from road to rail; and if he will report on the extent to which freight has been transferred to rail since April 1992.

The Prime Minister: The Government believe that freight should be transported by rail whenever that makes commercial sense to customers and rail operators alike. The best way to facilitate this is to end British Rail's monopoly of rail services, as proposed in the White Paper "New Opportunities for the Railways", Cm 2012. Detailed information about rail freight carryings since April 1992 is a matter for British Rail.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will order an immediate inquiry into the reasons for and effect of the fall in the volume of rail freight traffic.

The Prime Minister: Rail freight has been in decline for many years. The Government's proposals for the privatisation of British Rail's freight operations, and the opening up of the rail network to new entrants, are aimed at improving rail's prospects for the future.

Tropical Timber

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom Government's position in respect of the preparatory committee for renegotiation of the international tropical timber agreement to be convened in Quito, Ecuador, in January 1993.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom had hoped that a second preparatory committee in Quito, Ecuador would be unnecessary; however, the tropical timber-producing countries require more time to develop their positions before discussing them with the consuming countries. The Quito meeting will provide a valuable opportunity for the producing and consuming countries to identify the issues they wish to renegotiate. The United Kingdom intends to participate in the second preparatory meeting and will work with its European neighbours for a speedy renegotiation of the 1983 agreement.

Iraq

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what steps Her Majesty's Government took during 1990 and prior to Iraq's invasion of Kuwait, to halt the export to Iraq of furnaces constructed by Consarc Engineering of Bellshill, near Glasgow.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 December 1992]: It is not normal practice to discuss the affairs of individual companies.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what requests Her Majesty's Government received from the United States Administration to stop the export to Iraq of two furnaces constructed by Consarc Engineering at Bellshill, near Glasgow, during 1990;

(2) what communications Her Majesty's Government received from the United States Administration during 1990 and prior to Iraq's invasion of Kuwait, concerning involvement by British companies in equipping a missile factory called Badr General Establishment.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 December 1992]: Communications between Governments are confidential.

Civil List

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister what items or headings of expenditure have been transferred from the royal family's expenditure funded from the civil list to the Government since 1972; on what dates; what is the current cost to the Exchequer of each such item or heading; and what was their cost at the time of their transfer.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 December 1992]: So far as I am aware, no items or headings of direct expenditure have been transferred from the civil list to the Government since 1972. However, following advice taken in 1987, consistent with government fees and charges policy, the royal household took on board the feasibility of charging full costs for certain administrative services. These included, for example, charging for the accommodation and support services provided to staff based in the royal household but who are employed by Government Departments. Similar charges are made on behalf of the civil list to the household's royal collection department and to the Prince of Wales's office. The cost to Government Departments in the years 1987-90, which should be seen in the context of the "1990 Royal Trustees Report"—HC 629—are as follows:

1987	83,372
1988	138,310
1989	132,809
1990	162,810

The separate identification of full costs for administrative services is in line with the Government's policy of identifying costs across the public sector.

Furniture and Furnishings (Regulations)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister which Government Department is responsible for drafting the Furniture and Furnishings Fire Safety Regulations; and what consultations are being undertaken on the terms of the regulations.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 3 December 1992]: The Furniture and Furnishings (Fire Safety) Regulations were made by the Department of Trade and Industry in July 1988. The DTI has recently consulted public on draft amendment regulations proposing to postpone, from 1 March 1993 to 1 March 1994, the date by which furniture included in the letting of accommodation must meet the fire resistance requirements of the 1988 regulations. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to allow businesses providing furnished accommodation more time to prepare for the fire resistance requirements and to complete the upgrading or replacement of their existing stock of furniture. It will remain a requirement that any additional replacement or additional furniture which they supply from 1 March 1993 must meet the fire resistance requirements.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants from his departments have been relocated from London to other parts of the United Kingdom (a) in the last five years and (b) in the last 10 years; and to where they were relocated.

Mr. Dorrell: A total of 3,114 posts from the Chancellor's departments have been relocated from London in the last five years under the current delegated approach. The table lists the moves by department and destination.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with industry on the current state of the economy.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer and I have frequent contact with representatives of industry, and pay close attention to their views on the economy. I have taken careful note of their concerns and proposals, and the broad welcome given to the autumn statement.

Third World Debt

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been granted in tax relief to United Kingdom banks against possible default on third world debts in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Dorrell: Provisions for doubtful sovereign debt by banks operating in the United Kingdom are estimated to have reduced corporation tax receipts in the last six years by the following amounts:

	£ million
1986-87	70
1987-88	240
1988-89	550
1989-90	480
1990-91	720
[1]1991-92	190

[1] provisional

Estimates for earlier years are zero or small.

Public expenditure

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the exchequer if he will make a statement on the reasons underlying the policy of seeking to reduce United Kingdom public expenditure as a proportion of national income.

Mr. Portillo: It is important, as the economy recovers, to reduce public expenditure as a share of national income so as to ensure that the benefits of recovery are not pre-empted by the state. A constantly increasing proportion would impose an intolerable burden on the wealth-creating sector and choke off growth. We need to reduce over time the ratio of public spending to gross domestic product so as to achieve our aim of returning the budget to balance as the economy recovers.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what weight is given to service-specific costs such as health care and medical inflation, education inflation and social service provision inflation in calculating public spending by Departments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Government do not plan public expenditure in volume terms. However, service-specific costs are one of the many factors taken into account when determining the allocation of the public expenditure total between programmes.

Share Ownership

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a breakdown of share ownership by occupational status for the most recent date available.

Mr. Dorrell: The 1992 Treasury-ProShare share ownership survey showed that 22 per cent. of the adult population in Great Britain owned shares. Of these shareholders, 45 per cent. were in full-time employment; 10 per cent. were in part-time employment; 2 per cent. were students; 5 per cent. were retired; and 37 per cent. were inactive or unemployed.

Sellafield

Mr. Gale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what meetings he and his Ministers and officials have had during the past 12 months with (a) Greenpeace and (b) other anti-nuclear groups to discuss the future of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Sir John Cope: Following a request from Greenpeace for a meeting to discuss the economics of nuclear fuel reprocessing, Treasury officials met representatives from Greenpeace in September 1992. There have been no meetings with other anti-nuclear groups in the last 12 months.

Pensions (Tax Relief)

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost in 1993-94 of removing tax relief at the higher rate from (a) personal pensions, (b) all forms of occupational pensions and (c) all pensions to which higher rate tax exemption applies.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 4 December 1992]: The latest estimates of the direct revenue yields for 1993-94, assuming statutory indexation of 3·25 per cent. on 1992-93 levels of allowances and thresholds, are as follows:

	£ million
Withdrawal of higher rate relief:—
on contributions to personal pensions[1]	180
on contributions to occupational pensions	300
on all pensions	480

[1] Including relief for retirement annuity premia and free standing additional voluntary contributions.

No account has been taken of possible behavioural changes resulting from restricting availability of relief at the higher rate in these ways.

Appointments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to announce the appointment of a team of independent forecasters to assist the Treasury; and if he will name the individuals he has approached to date.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 1 December 1992]: Pursuant to my reply of 3 December 1992, Official Report, column 306, I have now invited the following to become members of the panel:

Andrew Britton, Esq., National Institute of Economic and Social Research.
Professor Tim Congdon, Lombard Street Research.
Professor David Currie, London Business School.
Gavyn Davies, Esq., Goldman Sachs International Ltd.
Professor Wynne Godley, Cambridge University.
Professor Patrick Minford, Liverpool University.
Andrew Sentance, Esq., Confederation of British Industry.

ENVIRONMENT

Common Land

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to introduce new legislation on common land in England and Wales.

Mr. Maclean: Our policy on common land in England and Wales was set out in the statement made by the then Minister for the Environment and Countryside on 26 July 1990, at columns 391-92, but I cannot say when Commons legislation will be promoted to implement that policy.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much investment he is making in programmes for energy efficiency, energy conservation and combined heat and power programmes in the current year.

Mr. MacLean: The Energy Efficiency Office encourages energy efficiency through a range of initiatives, for which the budget for 1992-93 is £63 million. The promotion of combined heat and power is an integral part of the best practice programme which is one of these initiatives.

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many civil servants from his Department have been relocated from London to other parts of the United Kingdom (a) in the last five years and (b) in the last 10 years; and to where they were relocated.

Mr. Howard: Over the past five years my Department has relocated 174 posts from London to Bedford, Bristol, Leeds and Manchester. Although records are not available for earlier years, it would appear that no posts were relocated during the five years prior to 1988.

Overall some 45 per cent. of my Department's staff now work outside London. The need to retain posts in London is kept under review and we shall continue to look for opportunities to move posts to other parts of the country in accordance with Government policy.

Homelessness

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will meet the Churches National Housing Coalition to discuss its petition on the growth and persistence of homelessness.

Mr. Baldry: I addressed a meeting organised by the Churches National Housing Coalition as part of its lobby of Parliament on 1 December 1992, and I listened with interest to the concerns expressed.

Council Tax

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the income to be raised from the council tax in respect of (a) hospices and (b) other residential care homes, nationally and broken down by county authority area; and what representations he has received upon the council tax liability of (i) hospices and (ii) other residential care homes.

Mr. Robin Squire: There are about 16,000 residential care homes in England, and some 3,500 nursing homes, including hospices. My Department does not hold information on the bands to which each home will be allocated. Nor do we know the levels of discounts, reductions for disabilities and transitional relief to which each will be entitled. Furthermore, as local authorities will not be setting their council taxes until the spring, it is impossible to estimate the amount of tax which will be payable.

My Department has received a number of representations about the council tax from individual care and nursing homes, and from associations representing such homes.

Local Government Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will postpone the implementation of the local government superannuation scheme until after the results of the Goode inquiry have been made public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The recommendations of the Pension Law Review Committee will be considered carefully when they are published. If changes to the regulations governing the local government superannuation scheme become necessary, statutory consultations with the interested parties will take place. Meantime, amendments to the scheme will continue.

Council Reallocation Grants

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council reallocation grants were paid to people in (a) London and (b) England, wishing to move to Wales, in each year since 1989; and what was the cost to his Department in each of these years.

Mr. Baldry: Section 129 of the Housing Act 1988 empowers local authorities to give grants to their tenants to help them obtain other accommodation by buying or leasing a home or by extending an existing property.

Reports on the operation of cash incentive schemes in 1989-90 and 1990-91, based on returns from local authorities, have already been placed in the Library and include the information requested.

In 1991-92, a total of 22 grants were paid to tenants in London who wished to move to Wales and 12 to tenants in the rest of England who also wished to move to Wales. Information on the actual cost of the 34 grants in question is not readily available, but the average grant paid nationally in 1991-92 was £16,496.

Sellafield

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what work has been undertaken by his Department to assess the economic implications of a delay in commissioning the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Maclean: None. Consultation has already begun on the necessary draft authorisation for the Sellafield site to cover THORP operation.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what meetings he and his Ministers and officials have had during the last 12 months with (a) Greenpeace and (b) other anti-nuclear groups to discuss the commissioning of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State met members of Greenpeace on 21 September and discussed a number of issues including the commissioning of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Derelict Land Grant

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much derelict land grant expenditure there has been in the metropolitan borough of Wirral council district in each year since 1984 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1984 prices.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 4 December 1992]: The information requested is as follows:

Metropolitan Borough of Wirral: Derelict Land Grant Expenditure

	Expenditure £	1992 Prices £	1984 Prices £
1984-85	191,533	290,307	191,533
1985-86	213,122	319,329	202,091
1986-87	303,962	441,240	279,244
1987-88	187,922	258,580	163,646
1988-89	559,000	716,985	453,751
1989-90	175,000	210,613	133,289
1990-91	371,841	414,428	262,278
1991-92	351,419	366,354	231,852
[1]1992-93	400,000	400,000	253,144
Total	2,753,799	3,417,836	2,170,828

[1] Forecast

A further £102,000 derelict land grant was paid in this period towards reclamation schemes carried out by non-local authority applicants in the metropolitan borough of Wirral.

Empty Properties

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will break down into local authority areas the distribution of the £750 million budget announced in the autumn statement for the purchase of empty houses.

Sir George Young [holding answer 4 December 1992]: Of the £750 million package, £627 million is being spent in England. A total of £577 million has been allocated to the Housing Corporation for the purchase of empty, new and repossessed properties and £20 million for additional grants under the tenants incentive schemes—TIS. A total of £30 million is being allocated to local authorities for additional grants under the cash incentive scheme—CIS.

The resources for the purchase of empty properties are being allocated by the corporation to housing associations operating in a number of local authority areas. Around 75 per cent. of the money has now been allocated; the remainder will be allocated by early January. The distribution of the resources allocated so far is as follows:

	£ million
London and Home Counties (North East)	68·60
London and Home Counties (North West)	62·60
London and Home Counties (South)	84·33
West	59·20
East Midlands	42·10
West Midlands	34·20
North East	37·40
North West	31·40
Merseyside	6·80

The £20 million for additional TIS grants has been allocated by the corporation to its regions as follows:

	£ million
London and Home Counties (North East)	2·914
London and Home Counties (North West)	3·735
London and Home Counties (South)	4·161
West	2·434
East Midlands	1·466
West Midlands	2·072
North East	1·326
North West	1·506
Merseyside	0·376

The £30 million for additional CIS grants will be spent in London and the south-east. Allocations to individual local authorities will be announced shortly.

Tarmac

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the amount of the claim for liquidated damages made by the Property Services Agency Projects board against Tarmac in respect of the contract on the Hewell Grange prison in Leeds.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 4 December 1992]: The amount of any such claim is commercially confidential. The contract on Hewell Grange prison was excluded from the sale of PSA Projects to Tarmac. Any claims are the responsibility of the Home Office, as the client.

EDUCATION

Higher Education

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish an updated version of the table in annex 2 of "Higher Education: A New Framework", Cm 1541, setting out projections of home student numbers in higher education in Great Britain.

Mr. Forman: The public expenditure proposals announced in the autumn statement provide for a 13 per cent. increase in the number of full-time equivalent home and EC students in higher education in England over the next three years. The figures are:

	Number
1992-93	776,000
1993-94	842,000
1994-95	877,000
1995-96	880,000

The figures assume that the proportion of young people entering higher education—currently well over one in four—will remain broadly steady over the next three years, and that it will increase to one in three by the end of the decade—the level projected in the 1991 White Paper.

Mandatory Awards

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many investigations have been made by his Department into reports of delays in payment of mandatory awards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: The Department has investigated complaints of delays made against seven local education authorities in the current academic year.

Students (Sponsorship)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will call for a report on how institutions of higher and further education are reacting to the withdrawing of financial sponsorship from students by industrial and commercial sponsors.

Mr. Forman: Industry and commerce will decide questions of student sponsorship in the context of their overall recruitment policies. It is for individual higher and further education institutions themselves to consider whether changes in the financial sponsorship of students have any implications for the particular mix and type of courses they provide. Any withdrawing of sponsorship by industry and commerce will not however affect a student's entitlement to a mandatory award or student loan.

Discipline

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what role his Department has in any disciplinary proceedings in locally or directly managed schools.

Mr. Forth: Disciplinary procedures applying to staff in local education authority-maintained schools without delegated budgets are the responsibility of the local education authority; in schools with delegated budgets and grant-maintained schools, they are under the control of the governing body.

Open University

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement outlining what action he has taken in respect of the final report of the visiting committee of the Open university.

Mr. Forman: My right hon. Friend decided, on the advice of the chairman of the Open university visiting committee, that the report should be passed to the Higher Education Funding Council for England, since that body would be responsible for the Open university's funding from April 1993. A copy of the report was sent to the chairman of the funding council on 21 August.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much financial provision he has made available in the current year to the Open university to assist students in financial hardship.

Mr. Forman: The practice of earmarking a portion of the Open university's recurrent grant for the provision of financial support for unemployed students was discontinued in 1991 at the university's request. The university is now free to determine how much of its grant it spends on assistance for students suffering financial hardship.

EC Education Council

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the outcome of the recent meeting of the Council of EC Ministers of Education.

Mr. Patten: I chaired the meeting on Friday 27 November of the Council of EC Education Ministers. The Under-Secretary of State for Further and Higher Education and the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland represented the United Kingdom.

After two and a half years of negotiation, the Ministers reached agreement on the terms of the new statute of the European schools. The effect of this will be to improve the efficiency of operation of the board of governors of these nine schools, which were established for the children of the staff of the EC institutions.

The Ministers also agreed that there should be a second four-year phase of the TEMPUS programme and exchanged views on its key features. TEMPUS is a programme of EC assistance to the countries of central and eastern Europe through co-operation in higher education. The first phase expires after the academic year 1993-94 and it should now be possible for the Council formally to adopt the second phase early next year.

The Ministers adopted conclusions on and discussed the future directions of co-operation at Community level in higher education and in open and distance learning. They adopted conclusions on EC-United States co-operation in education and training, health education in schools and the Eurydice network of information exchange in education.

School Closures

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will outline the criteria for the closure of rural schools.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend would expect any closure proposal to take account of considerations such as the number of pupils on roll, the quality of alternative provision, parental choice, local geography, the distance to be travelled to alternative schools, and the age of children making those journeys. That said, very small schools are expensive to run and where alternative schools are readily accessible closures can make sense.

Surplus School Places (Thamesmead)

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what estimate he has made of the number of surplus school places at both primary and secondary level in the Thamesmead area in both Greenwich and Bexley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: On the basis of the Department's survey of school capacity we estimate that in 1991 the London borough of Greenwich had 3,026 surplus places in the primary sector and 3,756 surplus places in the secondary sector, representing 15 and 22 per cent. of total capacity respectively. The authority has suggested that these figures should be revised to 2,689 primary and 3,796 secondary. It is not possible to say how many of these were located in the Thamesmead area.

A-levels

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the current percentage of those students taking GCSEs who go on to take A-levels.

Mr. Forman: About 40 per cent. of pupils who take GCSEs at 16 go on to study for A-levels at schools and publicly funded further education establishments.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to amend the law regarding public interest immunity certificates.

Mr. Jack: There are no current plans for legislation. However, the issue is within the scope of both Lord Justice Scott's inquiry and the Royal Commission on criminal justice; and we shall study carefully any recommendations that are made.

Police Pension Scheme

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take the necessary legislative and other steps to provide that the police pension scheme shall provide a pension for the widow of a policeman who married after retirement from the police force but before 6 April 1978 as if the requirements of the Social Security Act 1975 applied prior to that date.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. The police pension scheme is consistent with other main public service pension schemes on this matter. There is no justification for making an exception.

Teenage Prisoners

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) 16-year-olds, (b) 15-year-olds and (c) 14-year-olds have been held in an adult prison on remand for any period of time during each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The readily available information is given in the table. Separate figures for adult prisons are not readily available.

Prison Service (Director General)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement regarding the appointment of a new director general of the prison service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I hope to be able to make an announcement shortly.

Devon and Cornwall Police Authority

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what increases in uniformed officers have been approved for the Devon and Cornwall police authority for 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94; what were the requests of the authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is given in the table.

Year	Applications (Number of posts)	Posts approved
1991-92	31	15
1992-93	70	48
1993-94	49	Nil

In the light of the Government's decision that constraints must be placed upon public expenditure, my right hon. and learned Friend has concluded that the costs of additional police officers cannot at present be justified. He has therefore decided not to approve any increases in police establishments for 1993-94.

Immigration Ministers' Meeting

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the meeting of European Community Immigration and Trevi Ministers which he chaired in London on 30 November and 1 December.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The meeting of Ministers concerned with immigration was the 13th in the series of meetings held towards the end of each presidency since 1986.

Ministers approved a number of texts forming part of the immigration and asylum work programme endorsed by the Maastricht European Council a year ago. These consisted of

(i) A resolution on manifestly unfounded applications for asylum, which defines the cases to which it is appropriate to apply accelerated procedures;

(ii) A resolution on "host third countries", which sets out objective criteria defining the circumstances in which it is appropriate to return an asylum applicant to a safe third country for substantive consideration of the application;

(iii) Conclusions on countries in which there is generally no serious risk of persecution, which create a presumption against the claim of an asylum applicant from a country which is generally regarded as safe;

(iv) A recommendation regarding practices followed by member states on expulsion, designed to encourage best practice both in the effective removal of persons unlawfully in the territory of the member states and in the application of safeguards against unjustified or arbitrary expulsion;

(v) A recommendation regarding transit for the purposes of expulsion, which lays down procedures to be followed where it is necessary for a person being expelled to transit to another member state.

Ministers also considered a draft resolution on harmonisation of national policies on family reunification. They agreed the bulk of the text, but remitted one issue for further consideration by officials.

Ministers also approved conclusions on people displaced from former Yugoslavia and in particular the need for a more co-ordinated approach to the problem.

I am placing in the Library of the House copies of all the documents that were approved by Immigration Ministers, together with the press communiqué.

Ministers discussed developments on the free movement of persons in 1993 and exchanged views on their plans and intentions in respect of internal frontiers.

Discussion at the meeting of Trevi Ministers on 1 December focused on the establishment of Europol and in particular its first stage, the Europol drugs unit. The Ministers agreed that they wished to establish Europol, and in particular the Europol drugs unit, as quickly as possible. The meeting was unable to decide upon a location for the unit and this decision will now rest with the European Council.

Trevi Ministers also approved a number of reports from individual Trevi working groups on police co-operation against terrorism, police training and the co-ordination of intergovernmental police co-operation.

Discretionary Life Sentences

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on how many occasions the new discretionary life sentence tribunals have recommended that prisoners be moved to a lower security category; and on how many occasions that recommendation has been acted upon;

(2) how many discretionary life sentence prisoners have appeared before the new lifer tribunals; and how many of them have been recommended for immediate release.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Thirty-three discretionary life prisoners have so far appeared before a discretionary lifer panel of the parole board. Four prisoners have been released on life licence following a direction from the board. Of the remaining prisoners, the board has recommended that one should be released for deportation, 15 should be moved to conditions of lower security and that six should be considered for specialist treatment. These recommendations are being carefully considered.

Young Offenders

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many section 53 offenders, aged 16 years and under, are at present placed in adult prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: According to the records held centrally, which are approximate, no offenders under 17 detained under section 53 of the Children and Young People Act 1933 were held in adult prisons in England and Wales on 31 August 1992, the latest date for which information is available. However, six such detainees were being held in remand centres.

Terrorists

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons from Northern Ireland are presently serving prison sentences in Great Britain for terrorist offences; how many of these are serving life sentences; and to which terrorist organisations they belong.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 1 December 1992, 16 prisoners who have given Northern Ireland as their place of birth were serving sentences in England and Wales for serious offences related to terrorism. Of these, nine are serving life sentences. It is not the practice to discuss claimed or suspected affiliation to particular organisations.

Drugs

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the Welsh prison population is made up of prisoners serving sentences for drug-related offences.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 30 June 1992, the latest date for which information is readily available, prisoners serving sentences for drugs offences accounted for approximately 3·5 per cent. of the total sentenced population and 2 per cent. of the total population, including remand and non-criminal prisoners, in prison service establishments in Wales.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being taken to prevent the flow of drugs into prisons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have a range of measures to deter and detect attempts to bring drugs into prisons. These include searching prisoners on reception and on return from home leave or other absences; searching or storing away visitors' hand luggage; and searching visitors themselves where there is reason to believe that they intend to smuggle drugs in.

We search prisoners, their cells and other areas for those drugs that do find their way into prison. We have increased the number of prison dogs trained to detect drugs and each prison has received a training package to help staff detect and identify drugs.

The best way to prevent drugs entering prisons is to tackle the root cause by reducing the demand. We have published detailed guidelines on the through care of drug misusers. These require all prisons to have in place effective arrangements for identifying drug users and providing clinical care and detoxification programmes where necessary. We encourage prisons to make full use of community drug agencies to provide counselling and preventive training.

Life Licence Prisoners

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many life licence prisoners are currently in gaols in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: These figures are published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales", chapter 8 of the volume for 1990, Cm 1800.

The provisonal figure for the number of life sentenced prisoners in prison service establishments on 30 June 1991 who had been recalled from licence is 122. This compares with a total population of life sentence prisoners of 2,896 for the same date.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 654, what is the nature of the national interest which led him to sign a public interest immunity certificate on 27 July;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 654, if he will list the police forces, prosecuting authorities and others involved in the communications regarding which he signed a public interest immunity certificate on 27 July, whether in the United Kingdom or abroad;

(3) pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 654, how many communications, and over what period of time, were covered by the public interest immunity certificate he signed on 27 July; and between what dates those communications took place;

(4) pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 654, what matters or issues were dealt with in the communications covered by the public interest immunity certificates he signed on 27 July;

(5) pursuant to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 654, whether, in regard to the public interest immunity certificate he signed on 27 July, the communications covered involved matters of national security interest.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 1 to 4 December 1992]: The certificate asserted the public interest in protecting the confidentially of exchange of information in order to prevent or detect crime. I do not believe that it would be in the public interest for exchanges between police authorities investigating crime to be put into the public domain. It would not be sensible to give further details in this case.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Peru

40. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many bilateral aid agreements are in force between the United Kingdom and Peru.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are 17 agreements, two of which concern specific projects.

Voluntary Agencies (British Workers)

41. Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens are working for voluntary aid agencies overseas.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no information on the total number of British citizens working for voluntary agencies overseas. However, the four volunteer sending agencies funded by the Overseas Development Administration have around 2,000 volunteers working in developing countries.

Good Governance Policy

42. Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government next intend to review the restrictions on development aid imposed in pursuit of the good governance policy.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We keep aid allocations to individual recipient countries under regular review. This takes into account the standards of government in the countries concerned.

Somalia

43. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the amount of aid to Somalia that has not been used for the purposes for which it was intended.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It is impossible to estimate accurately the extent of misappropriation. There are conflicting reports. They vary according to the security of the region where aid is to be delivered and the type of assistance provided. Food aid for the centre and south of the country is most vulnerable. We hope the new UN/US operation will provide a more secure environment, which will enable more aid to be delivered to those in need. On 4 December, Baroness Chalker, the Minister for Overseas Development, announced a further contribution of £4·5 million for humanitarian assistance to Somalia. This brings Britain's contribution to Somalia's relief effort to £31·5 million in 1992.

Aid Payments

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid was paid for in (a) pound sterling and (b) other currencies, specifying which currencies, in each of the last 10 years; and what were the percentages for each currency.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is available for only part of the last 10 years, and could be extracted from departmental records only at disproportionate cost.

World Bank

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many structured adjustment loans the World bank made in each year since 1983; and if he will list them by country and amount.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The number of structural adjustment loans provided by the World bank between 1983 and 1992 were:

	Number
1983	15
1984	15
1985	16
1986	25
1987	31
1988	28
1989	33
1990	32
1991	33
[1]1992	16

[1] To April.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff are employed in the United Kingdom's executive director's office at the World bank in Washington DC; and if he will give details of their duties.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom executive director at the World bank, who is also our executive director at the International Monetary Fund, is supported by an alternate director for each institution and by six technical assistants. Details of the activities of the board of directors are set out in the World bank's annual report, a copy of which is available in the Libraries of the House.

Iraq

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is currently being made by his Department in securing direct flights containing humanitarian aid into Iraqi Kurdistan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Together with other contributors to humanitarian operations in northern Iraq, we believe that road, rather than air, transport is the most cost-effective way of getting aid to those who need it. We have therefore supported the United Nations plan of action which gives priority to ensuring the delivery of relief supplies by road.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts are currently undertaken by his Department to alleviate any difficulties faced by the Kurdish people of northern Iraq as a direct result of the United Nations imposed sanctions against Iraq.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The difficulties faced by the Kurdish people of northern Iraq result from the actions of the Baghdad Government, including an internal embargo on the supply of essential goods, rather than from United Nations sanctions. Food, medicine and other goods for essential civilian needs are not covered under the terms of the United Nations sanctions resolutions.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the European Community to ensure that assistance granted to Iraqi Kurdistan is channelled through the Iraqi Kurdish National Assembly and non-governmental organisations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are in regular contact with the Commission of the European Community about humanitarian assistance to Kurdish areas of northern Iraq. Like our own bilateral aid, EC aid to these areas is being channelled through non-governmental organisations and the World Food Programme.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the United Nations concerning the delivery of food, fuel, medicine and reconstruction equipment and material for water, sanitation and shelter for the Kurdish people of Northern Iraq.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We hold regular discussions with the United Nations on these issues. My noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development met the head of the United Nations department of humanitarian affairs on 7 December, and agreed with him on the urgent need for the provision of relief supplies to northern Iraq, in view of the imminent onset of winter.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to channel aid to the Kurdish people of northern Iraq either through the United Nations or through the Iraqi Kurdish National Assembly.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our bilateral aid to northern Iraq has been channelled through UN agencies, and through British and Kurdish non-governmental organisations. Details of our latest pledge were given in my reply of 26 October to the hon. Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Rooney), at column 433.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Turkey concerning the transport of non-military aid through Turkey to Iraqi Kurdistan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We hold regular discussions with the Government of Turkey on humanitarian operations in northern Iraq. We welcome the cooperation which they have given in enabling food and other relief goods to be transported from Turkey to Kurdish areas of Iraq.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for helping the Kurds in Iraq.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have spent £52·4 million since April 1991 on aid for Iraqi civilians. Further relief assistance is urgently needed before the onset of winter. We are therefore making available today a further £2·6 million, of which about £2·4 million will be provided to the World Food Programme for urgently needed edible oil and pulses, and the remainder to British non-governmental organisations for relief activities in northern Iraq.

Forests

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what countries have benefited from United Kingdom bilateral aid assistance under the tropical forestry action plan; and how much money has been pledged and disbursed in relation to each recipient country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The following countries/areas have benefited from United Kingdom bilateral aid assistance under agreed tropical forestry action plans over the last five years.

	Pledged £ million	Disbursed £ million
Belize	Total to be determined	0·404
Cameroon	1·900	1·000

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the publication of the African Development bank's forestry policy will take place.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The African Development bank's forestry policy paper was issued in draft on 2 December 1992. Internal consultations are expected to be completed by end-January 1993, and publication should follow shortly thereafter.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of bilateral forestry projects approved for Brazil with total estimated costs.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following is the information:

1. ABRACOS (Anglo-Brazilian Amazonian climate observation study) operates in the states of Amazonas, Para and Rondonia. The British Institute of Hydrology (IH) is Project Manager, and INPE (Space Research Institute), is the lead Brazilian collaborating institute, together with INPA (National Research Institute for Amazonia) and CENA (Centre for Nuclear Energy in Agriculture). The project is a study of the impact of deforestation on climate. The objective is to improve the accuracy and credibility of general circulation model (GCM) predictions of the climatic consequences of Amazonian deforestation by addressing the land/atmosphere interaction and the difference in near surface climate associated with forest clearance. The project follows the pioneering work of IH and INPE in the mid-1980s and involves the establishment of four field measuring stations in Amazonas, Para and Rondonia. The Amazonas sites were established in 1990, and the other two set up during 1991. Brazilian scientists take field readings throughout the year, and British scientists participate in periodic intensive field missions. The project was agreed in March 1990 and the first field mission was in September-November 1990. The total cost of the project to ODA is £2·9 million over five years, including the £0·5 million of specialist equipment.

2. Caxiuana research station project, Para state has the Museu Paraense Emilio Goeldi as project manager. The project involves the establishment of a new biological research station in the Caxiuana national forest, with appropriate infrastructure and facilities. We are providing financial support for local construction costs, transport (vehicles and boats) and laboratory equipment, and technical assistance (mainly short-term inputs, plus one full-time expert). The project will provide a well-equipped research station in an undisturbed forest area rich in biodiversity. It should become one of the leading facilities for rainforest research anywhere in the tropics. Construction commenced in February 1992. The cost to ODA is £1·28 million over three years.

3. The aromatic plants development project, Para state has the British Natural Resources Institute (NRI) and Museu Goeldi as joint project managers. FCAP (facility of agricultural science of the university of Para) is also collaborating. The project is an evaluation of the economic potential of the aromatic plants of the state of Para, through a study of indigenous aromatic plants and two applied research programmes concerned with the development potential of rosewood and the aromatic herbs of the piper genus. The project involves a series of short-term consultancies and a programme of plant collection and analysis in Brazil and Britain. Field collections and trials are under way and a natural products laboratory built and equipped. The cost to ODA is £0·6 million over three years, starting in 1991.

4. The floodplain forest ecology and management project, near Belem, Para state has the Museu Goeldi as project manager. The project consists of biological studies of the ecology, natural regeneration and flora of flooded forest, economic studies of farm/forest production systems and an extension programme based at Combu island near Belem. The cost to ODA is £0·24 million over two years, from 1991.

5. The Tocantins forestry and rural development project, Para state aims to conserve the forest in the Brazil nut zone around Maraba through improving the farming systems and living conditions of small farmers. The project will develop ways of improving agricultural productivity and stability through the introduction of agroforestry, tree crops and better marketing systems. Ways of managing and conserving the remaining forest will also be investigated. IDESP (Institute of Socio-Economic Development of Para state) is project manager but field implementation is in the hands of the Tocantins agroenvironmental centre, a local NGO which brings together small farmers from the Maraba area together with researchers from the university of Para. The project was approved in September 1991. The ODA contribution amounts to £1·1 million over three years and consists of technical assistance, training material and equipment.

6. Forest biomass and nutrients research project, Manaus, Amazonas state with INPA (National Research Institute for Amazonia) and NRI as project managers. The proposal involves research on the distribution and dynamics of biomass and minerals in tropical forest. The cost to ODA is £1·74 million over three years, starting this year.

7. The central Amazonia flora and vegetation project, near Manaus, Amazonas state. The project has been designed by INPA and the royal botanic gardens, Kew. It consists of botanical collections, taxonomic studies, the production of a guide to the flora of the Ducke reserve near Manaus, and vegetation-type mapping in central Amazonia. The cost to ODA is £0·57 million over three years, starting this year.

8. Rainforest silviculture research project, CPATU. The eastern Amazonia agroforestry research centre of the Brazilian Agricultural Research Institute (CPATU-EMBRAPA), Belem, is managing this project. The five year programme of studies on forest growth, production and regeneration, timber extraction techniques and genetic resource conservation is aimed at improving forest management. The ODA contribution will consist primarily of training and provision of technical assistance in tropical forest research, and will cost £2·2 million over five years starting this year.

9. Tapajos national forest management project. We are providing £0·85 million through the International Tropical Timber Organisation to support IBAMA (the Federal Environment Institute) to set up a system of sustainable logging practices in a 5,000 hectare area of the Tapajos national forest. Commercial logging will take place under licence to IBAMA. The project aims to provide a model of sustainable logging for Brazil. The project will be managed by the ITTO; ODA will be represented on a project steering committee. The project was agreed in April 1992, and will last five years.

10. Implementation of the Lake Mamirsua ecological station, near Tefe, Amazonas state. The project involves protection and development of a management plan for 200,000 hectares of flooded forest within a recently established state ecological station. It aims to establish a programme that integrates the conservation of biodiversity with the livelihood of local people living within the protected area. Estimated cost to ODA is £1·6 million over three years. The project is also being funded by the World Wide Fund for Nature and World Conservation International. It is expected to begin shortly.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what instructions have been passed to the British executive director at the African Development bank regarding that organisation's planned publication of a forestry policy.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have encouraged the bank for some time to establish and publish its forestry policy. We are currently considering the draft proposals which we have just received.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had with Senhor Sydney Possuelo, the head of Brazil's Indian Agency, about the illegal mahogany trade with Britain.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None.

African Development Bank

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff are employed in the United Kingdom's executive director's office at the African Development bank in Abidjan; and if he will give details of their duties.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom shares a constituency with Germany, the Netherlands and Portugal. The executive director is assisted by an alternate executive director—who is part time—an adviser and an assistant. The board of directors considers all lending proposals and a wide range of policy documents. Details of its work are set out in the bank's annual report, which is available in the Libraries of the House.

Education Partners Overseas

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to announce a decision concerning the submission for grant aid made by Education Partners Overseas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The application from Education Partners Overseas will be considered, along with other claims, early next year when we consider the allocation of our information budget for the coming financial year.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Pit Closures

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the per capita expenditure to be borne by the Exchequer, involved in redundancy payments for the closure proposals announced by British Coal in October; and to what extent such payments are subject to the approval of the EC.

Mr. Eggar: The British Coal redundancy terms give maximum payments of £37,000 per employee. The Exchequer funds 90 per cent. of such payments direct to the corporation through restructuring grant. Restructuring grant payments have European Community approval and are notified annually to the Commission.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a copy of the report by John T. Boyd, the American mining consultant, commissioned by his Department; how many of the 31 pits earmarked for closure by British Coal the report indicated could become viable within the next three to four years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 4 December 1992]: No. I have made arrangements for the report to be made available to the Select Committee in confidence. The Boyd report prepared for my Department earlier this year contains detailed information on individual pits which is commercially confidential. It did not assess the viability of individual collieries, but looked at the scope for productivity improvements and cost reductions in a group of representative collieries.

Offshore Installations

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he is taking to ensure that the Welsh marine environment is not damaged by spills from drilling rigs.

Mr. Eggar: It is our general and established policy, before offering blocks for licence in any part of the United Kingdom continental shelf, to consult relevant statutory and non-statutory bodies and to attach licence conditions agreed with such bodies which reflect each block's sensitivities. Environmental conditions are agreed principally with the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, but the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Department of the Environment, and fishing industry representatives are also consulted. Conditions may include, for example, bans on drilling in specified areas, seasonal restrictions on exploration activities, requirements to carry out environmental and seabed surveys, bans on the use of oil-based drilling muds, and controls or bans on discharges from drilling rigs.

In the block off the north Wales coast where drilling is currently in progress, environmental and local seabed surveys were carried out before drilling started. Water-based muds are being used, and cuttings may be discharged to the sea since tidal conditions in the area ensure their rapid dispersal. No other rig discharges are permitted; nor are any fuel transfers while the rig is on site.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to halt all further exploratory drilling for hydrocarbons off the Welsh coast until the promised energy review takes place.

Mr. Eggar: The purpose of exploration drilling is to search for and identify deposits of hydrocarbons. Oil and gas production continues to make a significant contribution to the United Kingdom economy because new reserves have been identified to replenish supplies as early reserves have become depleted. The longer we can sustain economic indigenous oil and gas production, the better for the United Kingdom economy.

Additional approvals are required before a deposit identified from exploration drilling and found on further appraisal to be of commercial value can be developed for production. A find from current drilling off the Welsh coast would be unlikely to come into production before the end of the century. There is therefore no case for halting exploration drilling.

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many civil servants from his Department have been relocated from London to other parts of the United Kingdom (a) in the last five years and (b) in the last 10 years; and if he will list the locations to which those civil servants were relocated.

Mr. Eggar: The table shows the number of Department of Trade and Industry posts which have relocated from London:

Location	Number
(a) Since January 1988
Birmingham	135
Billingham	53
Cambridge	33
Edinburgh	5
Newport	984
Cardiff	24
Teddington	340
(b) During the period 1983 to 1987
Teddington	49

IAEA

Mr. John Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what extra-budgetary contributions to meet particular needs of the International Atomic Energy Agency for safeguards equipment have been made by the Government in the last five years.

Mr. Eggar: There has been one such contribution, a payment of £200,000 in 1991-92.

Bureaucracy

Mr. Ancram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what benefits for consumers he expects to arise as a result of his proposals to remove unnecessary bureaucracy in Government Departments.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The aim of the deregulation initiative is to reduce significantly administrative and regulatory burdens on business. The removal of unnecessary regulation and administrative procedure and simplification of that which remains will allow businesses more time and freedom to respond to their customers' needs. This, together with the beneficial effect on prices and public borrowing as a result of lower compliance and enforcement costs, will benefit consumers as well as business.

Wind Farms

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many megawatts were generated by wind farms in Great Britain in each year since 1989; and if he will make a statement about the future of wind energy generation in Great Britain.

Mr. Eggar: Figures for electricity generation from renewable sources of energy are now published annually in the "Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics". The first wind farms to be constructed in Great Britain have all become operational since the beginning of 1992 and have so far generated an estimated 17 GW hours of electricity. These figures are expected to increase rapidly as wind farms constructed under the non-fossil fuel obligation orders come on stream.

Blank Tapes

Mr. Hendry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received on the imposition of levies on blank tapes for the music industry.

Mr. Leigh: The Government have received numerous representations for and against the proposal that a levy should be put on blank recording tape to compensate copyright owners for private copying. Representations were particularly numerous during the passage of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988, when the Government decided not to introduce such a levy, and many further representations have been received since the European Commission announced in January 1991 its intention to propose a draft directive on private copying. Bodies that have made representations include the Royal National Institute for the Blind, The Talking Newspaper Association of the United Kingdom, the Music Copyright Reform Group, the British Phonographic Industry, the Home Taping Rights Campaign and the British Copyright Council.

Japanese Energy Minister

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the Minister for Energy in his Department last met with his Japanese counterpart in Japan; and what specific matters were discussed and decided.

Mr. Eggar: I visited Japan from 11 to 13 November 1992 and met members of the Government and heads of Japanese energy utilities. Discussions focused on the bilateral energy relationship in offshore oil and gas, nuclear and energy policy areas. I also lent my support to British companies at an Offshore Supplies Office technology seminar where I gave the keynote address.

Nuclear Materials

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what decisions were taken at the recent review conference of the convention on the physical protection of nuclear materials that affect United Kingdom policy; and what representation his Department had at the reveiw conference.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave to the Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 5 November 1992, Official Report, column 400. The United Kingdom was represented at the review conference by officials from my Department and the nuclear industry.

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the arrangements for liaison between his Department and the safeguards authorities at (a) Euratom and (b) the International Atomic Energy Agency over provision of data on the movements into and out of the United Kingdom of (i) plutonium, (ii) enriched uranium, (iii) natural uranium and (iv) spent nuclear fuel, respectively.

Mr. Eggar: The Department forwards to the Euratom safeguards directorate reports submitted in accordance with Euratom regulation 3227/76 on transfers of civil nuclear material. These reports include those materials referred to in the question. In accordance with the UK/IAEA/Euratom safeguards agreement—INFCIRC/263—relevant information is then passed to the IAEA by Euratom.

Insolvency

Mr. Gorst: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effect of the level of fees charged by insolvency staff for the administration of insolvency services on the interests of creditors; what controls exist to ensure that insolvency companies do not charge excessively for their services; and what plans he has to introduce legislation to impose limits on the fees that accountancy firms can claim.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Fees charged by insolvency staff employed by accountancy firms are not under the control of the President and accordingly he does not have a role in determining their level or assessing whether they are appropriate in the circumstances of any particular case.

In receiverships, the level of remuneration is agreed by the secured creditor making the appointment. In liquidations, fees charged are subject to approval by the creditors who have a financial interest in ensuring that they are fixed at a reasonable level. The means by which they approve them are either through a committee of creditors or in general meeting. In the absence of such approval, remuneration will be paid on the scale laid down for the Official Receiver in general regulations. Where either the liquidator or the creditors are dissatisfied with the level of remuneration, recourse may be had to the court.

There are no proposals to impose limits on the fees that accountancy firms can claim.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will set out the figures for manufacturing output for the last three available quarters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Salisbury [holding answer 2 December 1992]: As an index, with 1985 = 100, manufacturing output was 111 in the first quarter of 1992, 111·5 in the second quarter and 111·4 in the third quarter. In the first three quarters of 1992, manufacturing output was over a fifth higher than in 1981, the trough of the last recession.

Natural Gas

Mr. Churchill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the present proven reserves of British natural gas expressed in years remaining calculated (a) at 1990 consumption rates, (b) forecast consumption rates for 2000 and (c) forecast consumption rates for 2020, as forecast in DTI Energy Paper 59, October 1992.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 4 December 1992]: My Department's most recent estimate of the United Kingdom's proven reserves stood at 540 billion cu m[1]. The total consumption of gas onshore in the United Kingdom during 1990 amounted to 53 billion cu m of gas, which included approximately 7 billion cu m of imported gas[2].

These proven gas reserves are the known reserves in existing discoveries regarded as almost certain to be technically and economically producible following extensive appraisal work. Proven reserves represent some 30 per cent. of all discovered recoverable reserves. In addition, it is likely that further reserves will be proven to be recoverable from significant discoveries made but so far poorly appraised and from geologically identified prospects which have yet to be tested by drilling. It is not normal practice for the gas industry to carry out the expensive exploration and appraisal work required to add to the stock of proven reserves far in advance of production.

My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced on 26 October that the coal review would look into the latest estimates of likely reserves of gas and draw conclusions.

Energy Paper 59 presented some possible gas consumption scenarios in the context of a discussion of energy and the environment, in particular, climate change. These are scenarios, not forecasts by my Department.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what reason British Steel was not invited to quote for the basic plate material supply of the second Severn bridge crossing.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have been asked to reply.

The letting of contracts relating to the second Severn crossing is entirely a matter for the concessionaire for the project, Severn River Crossing plc, and its contractor for the design and construction of the new bridge, the John Laing-GTM Entrepose joint venture.

Trentham Colliery

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will require British Coal to pay in full (a) attendance bonuses and (b) conciliation bonuses in respect of employees at Trentham colliery who are attending for work.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for British Coal.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Social Fund

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will increase the budgetary allocation in respect of the social fund to the Belfast, South and Down district section of the Social Security Agency to meet underfunding in this area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alec Wylie to Mr. Eddie McGrady, dated 3 December 1992:

Your recent Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for an increase in the budget allocation in respect of Social Fund for the Belfast South and Down District of the Social Security Agency has been passed to me for reply as I am responsible for the Social Security Agency.

I should explain that Social Fund budget allocations are made at the beginning of the financial year in accordance with a formula which is applied to all Social Security Offices. While the position is monitored throughout the year additional allocations are normally only made when there has been a higher than expected level of loan recoveries or an unforseen demand on the Social Fund, for example, as a result of flooding or a bomb explosion.

The procedure has already led to two additional allocations to the Belfast South and Down District this year, £50,630 in October and £34,000 in November. As a result the District's total allocation has increased to £2,219,689, (£1,452,114 for Crisis and Budget Loans and £767,575 for Community Care Grants). At present it is not planned to make any further allocations but the situation will be kept under review.

I hope this explanation is helpful but I shall write to you again if the position changes. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report and copies will be placed in the Library.

Schools (Funding)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy that all maintained schools, including those denominational schools not in receipt of funding from the Department of Education in Northern Ireland, will in future receive funding on the same basis.

Mr. Hanley: All maintained schools and all controlled schools in any education and library board area receive funding on the same basis, that being the formula set out in the board's scheme for the local management of schools. Denominational schools not in receipt of funding from the Department of Education are independent schools which receive no resourcing from any public sector source, and I have no plans to change current policy in their regard.

Water

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated percentage of water lost in the supply system for water in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: The estimated loss is 20 per cent.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the names of the chairmen and members of the Northern Ireland water authority, and the date of their appointments.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is the water authority. It does not have a chairman.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to measure supply of water to domestic customers by meters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the estimated value of environmental sites and recreational amenities in the ownership of the Northern Ireland water authority;

(2) what is the estimated capital value of the water industry in Northern Ireland both for water and sewerage/sewage disposal.

Mr. Atkins: There is no separate water authority in Northern Ireland. Responsibility for water and sewerage services rests with the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland through its water service. The service is subject to normal Government accounting systems which do not require the value of assets to be shown in a commercial manner as would be the case under a commercial accounting system. Separate information on the value of assets is not therefore available.

Schools (Disciplinary Proceedings)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what role his Department has in any disciplinary proceedings in locally or directly managed schools.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the disciplinary proceedings in schools in Northern Ireland rests with boards of governors and/or employing authorities, depending on the particular circumstances, and does not involve my Department.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Stratford Local Office

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps have been taken to restructure the Stratford Benefits Agency office, Jubilee house; and on what date the work will be completed.

Mr. Burt: The planning for the restructuring or refurbishment of local DSS offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Ron Leighton, dated 4 December 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what steps have been taken to restructure the Benefits Agency Office at Jubilee House, Stratford, and on what date the work will be completed.

Following on from a feasibility study undertaken by the Property Services Agency and in view of the current workloads and operational needs of the office, proposals have been made to refurbish the customer area in Jubilee House rather than to completely restructure the whole building. Plans are already in hand and it is envisaged that, once full consultation has taken place, work should be complete by summer 1993.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Benefits

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the social security benefits (i) which have been abolished since 1979, (ii) which have not maintained their real value, in 1992 prices, since 1979 or the date at which they were introduced and (iii) whose availability has been restricted.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

(i) Social Security benefits abolished since 1979:

(a) Benefits replaced by reformed schemes
- Attendance Allowance (only for those disabled before age 65)
- Community Charge Rebate (Scotland)
- Death Grant
- Family Income Supplement
- Housing Benefit Supplement and old Housing Benefit scheme
- Industrial Injury Benefit
- Maternity Grant
- Mobility Allowance
- NCIP an HNCIP (non-contributory invalidity pension and housewives' NCIP)

- Child Benefit (when revalued from rate current in April 1979)

* Benefits uprated in November 1978, except for child benefit which was uprated in April 1979, have been revalued to April 1992 prices and compared with the equivalent benefit rates on that date.

(iii) Benefits whose availability has been restricted since 1979, or since the benefit's introduction. The list includes changes in entitlement conditions of a relatively minor nature.
- Housing Benefit
- Income Support
- Industrial Disablement Benefit

Housing Benefit

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will reconsider his decision not to award rent allowances to claimants whose landlord is a close relative;

(2) what is the definition of close relative for the purpose of eligibility for rent allowances;

(3) if he will estimate the number of (a) young people and (b) adults who have moved out of accommodation where the landlord is a close relative, because of non-eligibility for housing benefit, over the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Housing benefit is payable only in respect of a commercial rent liability. Most people living with close relatives do not have a rent liability, but instead made contributions to the household's living costs. It has never been the Government's intention that housing benefit should be payable for such contributions because there is no commercial liability. In this context a close relative is defined in regulations as a parent, parent-in-law, step-parent, child, step-child, child-in-law, brother, sister or the partner of any of the preceding persons. Information about the numbers of people unable to live with their close relatives because of the non-payment of housing benefit could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many civil servants from his Department have been relocated from London to other parts of the United Kingdom (a) in the last five years and (b) in the last 10 years; and to where they were relocated.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table and is in terms of posts relocated rather than individual civil servants. It has not been possible in all cases to identify separately posts relocating from London as opposed to the south-east as a whole and this is particularly so for the period before 1988. The information does not take account of the large numbers of new posts that the Department has created in areas away from London and the south-east.

Posts relocated from London in the last five years

Destination	Number
Wigan	320
Lytham	[1]243
Newcastle	300
Leeds	458
Glasgow	560
Belfast	421
Total	2,302

[1] It is not possible to identify separately London posts within this number.

Posts relocated between 1982 and 1987

Around 420 posts were relocated from London and the south-east to Newcastle, the North Fylde area and Southampton in this period. Only the posts that moved to Southampton, around 60, can be clearly identified as from London itself.

Young Persons (Benefits)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review his policy of refusing benefit to 16 and 17-year-olds without hostel accommodation.

Mr. Burt: There is no such policy. Housing benefit can be paid to 16 and 17-year-olds who have a commercial rent liability. Income support is available to 16 and 17-year-olds not required to be available for work or youth training and also to those at risk of severe hardship. Other benefits may be available subject to the young person meeting the qualifying conditions.

Dependency Regulations

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the Social Security (Dependency) Amendment Regulations 1992; and why it was decided to bring them into operation the day after they were laid before Parliament.

Miss Widdecombe: The Social Security (Dependency) Amendment Regulations 1992 remake the regulations which provide the earnings rules for increases of retirement pension and other benefits for adult dependants. The intention of the earnings rules is to reduce or remove the dependency increase if the dependant has earnings, including any occupational pension, above a certain level. In 1987, a social security commissioner decided that occupational pensions could be taken into account only if the dependant was working. That was never the intention and amendments to the Social Security Act in 1988 were thought to have restored the position so that all occupational pensions could be taken into account, whether the dependant was working or not. However, in a judgment given on 2 December 1992 the Court of Appeal ruled that the amendments to the Act did not automatically carry through to the subordinate regulations. Consequently it remained the case that occupational pensions could only be taken into account if the dependant was working. However, the court's judgment also meant that all that was required for the earnings rules to apply in the way intended was to introduce fresh regulations. In view of this, and in order to keep the additional expenditure as a result of the judgment to a minimum, it was decided to bring the new regulations into force without waiting for the usual 21 days after they were laid.

Income Statistics

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing changes in real income between 1979 and 1988-89 before and after housing costs for the top five deciles on a similar basis to table A.1 in "Households Below Average Income: a statistical analysis 1979-1988-89".

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 2 November, at column 100.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the share of total income in 1979 and 1988-89 for the top half of the income distribution broken down into percentiles before and after housing costs on a similar basis to table A.3 in "Households Below Average Income: a statistical analysis 1979-88-89."

Mr. Burt: The information required is in the table.

Share of total income received by individuals below various percentiles of the income distribution per cent.

Income before housing costs	1979	1988-89
Bottom 60 per cent. of the income distribution	42	37
Bottom 70 per cent. of the income distribution	53	48
Bottom 80 per cent. of the income distribution	65	60
Bottom 90 per cent. of the income distribution	79	74
After housing costs
Bottom 60 per cent. of the income distribution	42	36
Bottom 70 per cent. of the income distribution	52	46
Bottom 80 per cent. of the income distribution	65	59
Bottom 90 per cent. of the income distribution	79	74

Child Benefit

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cummulative amount of savings in 1993-94 on child benefit resulting from (a) not fully uprating it and (b) changing its structure since 1979 in gross and net terms.

Mr. Burt [holding answer 3 December 1992]: Information is not available in the form requested. We estimate that gross expenditure on child benefit in 1992-93 is £5·7 billion. If child benefit had been uprated annually in line with the retail prices index and with the normal rounding to the nearest 5p, the April 1979 rate—£4 a week per child—would be £9·20 from April 1992. It is estimated that the total savings in 1992-93 from paying £9·65 for the eldest qualifying child and £7·80 for each other child, instead of £9·20 for every child, are about £240 million. The corresponding net savings, after allowing for normal adjustments to other benefits, are around £145 million. It is not yet possible to make comparable estimates for 1993-94.

The extra help that has been made available to less well-off families since 1988 through the income-related benefits is worth around £620 million 1992-93, raising to around £1 billion in 1993-94.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number and percentage of people leaving youth training in 1991 in Lancashire who were without full-time employment after (a) eight months, (b) 10 months and (c) 12 months.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not available. Information on YT leavers economic status at eight months, 10 months and 12 months after leaving YT is not collected centrally.

WALES

NHS Trusts

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to lay Statutory Instruments Nos. 2730 to 2742 of 1992 before the House.

Mr. David Hunt: There is no requirement for these statutory instruments to be laid before the House. They are, however, available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will advertise in newspapers to invite applications for membership of NHS trusts in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: These appointments are not advertised in newspapers.

Tourism

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to discontinue section 4 grants for tourism in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total expenditure on section 4 grants for tourism-related projects in Wales in the last full year for which figures are available.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In 1991-92 the Wales tourist board provided £4,219,200 for tourism projects. This figure and more detailed information is contained in the board's 1991-92 annual report. A copy is available in the Library of the House.

Occupational Therapists

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many referrals to occupational therapists have been made in each county in Wales so far in the current year and in each of the last five years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The requested information is not available centrally.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what resources his Department has made available to each county council in Wales for occupational therapy services in the current year and in each of the last five years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The bulk of central Government support for local authorities' spending on occupational therapy services is provided through revenue support grant and basic credit approvals, which are not specifically earmarked by central Government for the support of particular services. It is for individual local authorities to determine how these resources should be allocated, and details of how much they spend on occupational therapy services are not held centrally.

Hearing Impairment

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children in south Glamorgan and in each county in Wales have been certified as having a hearing impairment requiring some assistance but who have not been statemented in each of the past five years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not collected centrally.

River Acidification

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement of the implications for Wales of the recent findings of a committee of the Forestry Commission on a link between conifer trees and river acidification.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None of the Forestry Commission's committees has made a recent finding of this kind. An expert workshop jointly sponsored by the Forestry Commission and the Department of the Environment concluded in June 1990 that the primary cause of surface water acidification was the deposition of airborne sulphur and nitrogen pollutants, but that there was also an association between trees and acidification resulting from the effectiveness of trees in scavenging these airborne pollutants. Whether the latter phenomenon would result in increased surface water acidification depended, however, on the sensitivity of the geology and soil in any given catchment area.

The members of the Forestry Commission's North Scotland regional advisory committee recently considered this and other scientific evidence presented to them in the course of considering planting grant applications over which objections had been raised on environmental grounds. They advised the commissioners that, in their opinion, there was sufficient doubt about the effect that tree planting on the specific sites concerned would have on surface water acidification as to prevent their recommending that the applications should be approved at this stage. In the light of this advice, the Forestry Commissioners have decided to delay taking a decision on these applications pending further monitoring of the sensitivity of the sites to further acid inputs from the atmosphere.

This has no particular implications for cases arising in Wales.

Health Service Pay

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy to support the continued work of the pay review body for nurses, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine in order to provide objective evidence on comparative pay levels irrespective of any Government action to restrain pay in the short-term.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, on 13 November, at columns 1002-3. The Government are confident that the review body system is the right way of determining the pay of those staff within their remits.

South Glamorgan Health Authority

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) which executive directors of South Glamorgan health authority are part of purchaser function; and which are part of the provider function;

(2) he will list the names and roles of the executive directors of South Glamorgan health authority.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: While health authorities retain responsibility for directly managed units, as in the case of South Glamorgan, authority members are accountable for both purchaser and provider issues and performance. As directly managed units achieve NHS trust status, the provider function will diminish and eventually authorities will focus exclusively on their purchaser role.

Details of the precise roles and responsibilities of the executive directors of South Glamorgan health authority, and their names, should be obtained from the health authority.

Schools (Discipline)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what role his Department has in any disciplinary proceedings in locally or directly managed schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Department has no direct role in staff disciplinary matters. Responsibility for such matters lies with the local education authority in respect of staff in LEA-maintained schools without delegated budgets. In the case of schools with delegated budgets and grant-maintained schools, the responsibility rests with the governing body.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Pensions

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Lord President of the Council what action he has taken, since the debate on Members' salaries on 25 November, in regard to hon. Members who may end their service after 1 January 1993, due to death or ill-health.

Mr. Dixon: To ask the Lord President of the Council what steps he has now taken for the parliamentary contributory pension fund to include a scheme for additional voluntary contributions or otherwise to protect hon. Members who may have to retire due to ill-health after 1 January 1993 and to protect the dependants of hon. Members who may die while in the service of the House after that date.

Mr. Newton: I shall be meeting the trustees of the parliamentary contributory pension fund shortly to discuss the pensions matters raised in the debate on 25 November, including the possibility of setting up an additional voluntary contribution scheme.

SCOTLAND

Council Tax

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the draft council tax valuation lists which were delivered to levying authorities in Scotland by 30 November.

Mr. Stewart: Assessors delivered draft valuation lists, showing the bandings of dwellings in Scotland, to levying authorities by 30 November. The number of dwellings in each valuation band is given in the table.

	Percentage	Number
Band A	27·40	590,499
Band B	26·32	567,268
Band C	15·28	329,246
Band D	10·89	234,568
Band E	10·77	232,037
Band F	5·24	112,871
Band G	3·64	78,353
Band H	0·47	10,075
Total	100·00	2,154,917

Note:
The figures exclude lock-ups and private storage premises that are separately entered in the valuation list and are exempted from the council tax.

Information on the number of dwellings in each district and islands area and their distribution between bands has been placed in the Library. Householders will be able to see the draft lists at the principal offices of their levying authority. The valuations have been carried out by local assessors. Valuations have been made on the basis of the price, subject to certain assumptions, which dwellings might have reasonably been expected to realise on the open market if sold on 1 April 1991.

Arrests

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were arrested by the police in Scotland for each year since 1986.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the number of arrests by police is not held centrally in Scotland.

Tourism

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to recommend the discontinuance of section 4 grants in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have no such plans. The arrangements for Government support for the tourism industry in Scotland, including the Scottish tourist board's section 4 scheme of assistance, are however, kept under constant review. I am at present seeking views on their effectiveness.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total expenditure on section 4 grants for tourism-related projects in Scotland in the last full year for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish tourist board awarded section 4 grant assistance amounting to £3,616,000 during 1991-92.

Wildlife Incident Investigation Scheme

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future funding of the wildlife incident investigation scheme in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 3 December 1992]: The Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department is reviewing the information required to monitor the effects of pesticides on wildlife and will be putting proposals to the Advisory Committee on Pesticides. Arrangements for funding will need to be considered in the light of its recommendations.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he or his officials last met representatives of the agrochemical industry to discuss the future funding of the wildlife incident investigation schemes.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 3 December 1992]: Officials of the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department met representatives of the agrochemical industry and other interested organisations on 30 October to discuss industry funding of pesticides-related work, including the wildlife incident investigation schemes.

NHS Management Consultants

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent by each Scottish health authority on the services of management consultants in (a) 1991 and (b) 1992.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 4 December 1992]: Information available from the annual accounts of health boards relates to the total fee paid to management consultants, to legal firms, other than for legal expenses connected with compensation claims, and to work study consultants. The amounts for each health board for each year are shown in the table.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what meetings he attended whilst in the United States of America on issues relating to GATT in the month prior to the announcement of the settlement of the GATT round of discussions on rapeseed and cereals.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend was in Chicago when EC and United States negotiators met from 1 to 3 November. He was present in his capacity as president of the Agriculture Council, after prior discussion with, and agreement by, the Commission in order to provide any support that the Commission might have found useful. He took no part in the negotiations themselves.

Mr. Lord: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much land he estimates will have to be set aside from oilseeds and cereals growing, in the United Kingdom, following the recently negotiated GATT agreement.

Mr. Curry: Under the common agriculture policy reform agreement reached by the Council in May this year, EC growers of cereals, oilseeds and protein crops—other than those categorised as small producers—are required to setaside 15 per cent. of the land on which they are claiming arable support in relation to the 1993 harvest. The figure of 15 per cent. may be varied in later years. The settlement reached between the EC and the United States of America over the GATT oilseeds dispute includes provisions to contain EC production of oilseeds. To this end, the EC will establish a separate oilseeds base area of 5,499 million hectares for the 1994 harvest and 5·128 million hectares for the 1995 and subsequent harvests. This base area, reduced by either the EC's general arable set-aside percentage for the year in question, or 10 per cent. if that is greater, will be eligible for full EC oilseeds area aid. Should a larger area of oilseeds be grown in the EC, the aid will be reduced by 1 per cent. for each 1 per cent. of increased area.

Aujeszky's Disease

Mr. Lord: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement giving precise details of how the new animal health trade rules designed to safeguard the United Kingdom's freedom from Aujeszky's disease, recently agreed by the European Community, differ from those which previously protected pig producers.

Mr. Soames: In recent years, very few pigs have been imported into Great Britain and only under trade conditions to ensure that Aujeszky's disease would not be introduced. Now that other member states have accepted our approach in dealing with foot and mouth disease and trade can therefore take place more easily, pigs from other member states will be free to enter Great Britain without entering quarantine. To protect our freedom from Aujeszky's disease, we sought, and have now obtained, Community approval for additional trade guarantees which will apply to imports from other member states from 1 January 1993.

Fisheries (Rating)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what offsetting benefits he proposes to angling clubs against their increased costs arising from the proposed rating of fisheries;

(2) if he will meet the Mow Cop angling club to discuss their concerns on rating of angling clubs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Under section 142 of the Water Resources Act 1991, the National Rivers Authority may apply to Ministers for an order requiring owners and occupiers of fisheries to contribute to the cost of the carrying out of its fisheries functions. No such application has yet been made. The authority is, we understand, developing proposals for a section 142 contributions scheme and has already undertaken a consultation exercise based on its discussion document "A Fair Assessment". The NRA is developing ideas for a further round of consultations. Angling clubs and others will have every opportunity to express their concerns in this context, and may submit further comments on the proposals to Ministers if and when the authority applies for an order. In these circumstances, I have no plans at present to meet angling clubs.

Meat Inspections

Mr. Spreat: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of meat carcases are found to have significant pathology by meat inspectors in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: This information is not available centrally.

Regulatory Measures

Mr. Spreat: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 26 November, Official Report, column 826, if he will list, by identifiable title for each measure, all the measures in areas governed by the EC increasing regulation in any area for which his Department has responsibility which his Department has caused to be put into effect since 9 April.

Mr. Curry: A very high proportion of the activities for which this Department has policy responsibility are governed by EC regulation. EC Council and Commission regulations are directly applicable and in general do not require United Kingdom legislation for their implementation beyond enforcement and offence provisions. EC directives require United Kingdom implementing legislation to apply them although the boundary between EC and United Kingdom legislative responsibility is not always clear cut. I consider the following measures, implemented since 9 April, might have increased the legislative burden on business:

Council Regulation (EEC) No. 1765/92 of 30 June 1992 establishing a support system for producers of certain arable crops (as amended).

Commission Implementing Regulation (EEC) No. 2780/92 of 24 September on the conditions for the grant of compensatory payments under the support system for producers of certain arable crops.

Commission Implementing Regulation (EEC) No. 2294/92 of 31 July on detailed rules for the application of the support system for producers of the oil seeds referred to in Council Regulation (EEC) No. 1765/92 (as amended).

Commission Implementing Regulation (EEC) No. 2295/92 of 31 July 1992 on detailed rules for the application of the support system for producers of the protein crops referred to in Article 6 of Council Regulation (EEC) No. 1765/92 (as amended).

Commission Regulation (EEC) No. 2293/92 of 31 July 1992 laying down detailed rules for the application of Council Regulation (EEC) No. 1765/92 with regard to the set-aside scheme referred to in Article 7.

Commission Regulation (EEC) No. 2296/92 of 31 July 1992 laying down certain rules of application of the use of land set aside for the provision of materials for the manufacture within the Community of products not primarily intended for human or animal consumption (as amended).

The Food Additives Labelling Regulations 1992 (SI 1991 No. 1978).

The Flavourings in Food Regulations 1992 (SI 1992 No. 1971).

The Organic Products Regulations 1992 (SI 1992 No. 2111). Entered into force 1 October 1992. This SI implements the requirement of Council Regulation 2092/91 for a national control body. This body will oversee the registration of all organic farmers/producers etc. and ensure organic standards are met. There is a charge for registration.

Two SIs will come into effect on 1 January 1993 on horses. One will implement 90/428 the other 90/427. The titles are:

The Horses (Free Access to Competitions) Regulations 1992.

The Horses (Zootechnical Standards) Regulations 1992.They are to be laid before Parliament on 10 December.Council Regulation 2083/92 (14 July 1992)—amending Regulation 2092/91 on third country imports whereby a Member State's 'competent authority' may authorise imports from a third country that is not on the official Commission list. This amendment also alters the date of implementation of Regulation 2092/91 from 23 July 1992 to 1 January 1993.

Commission Regulation 1535/92 (15 June 1992)—amending Annexes II and III of Council Regulation 2092/91 whereby national rules on organic animals and organic animal products shall apply until Commission standards are agreed.

The Oil and Fibre Plant Seeds (Amendment) Regulations 1992 SI No. 1613.

These Regulations implement Commission Directive 92/9/EEC so as to introduce standards for seed borne disease organisms harmful to soya beans.

The Fodder Plant Seeds (Amendment) Regulations 1992 SI No. 1614 and

The Seeds (National Lists of Varieties) (Amendment) Regulations 1992 SI 1615.

These two Regulations implement Commission Directive 92/19/EEC by adding Festulolium (a cross between Meadow fescue and Italian Ryegrass) to each of the Regulations.

A number of quota management measures have been put into effect to regulate the fishing industry, but this is a continuing requirement reflecting the United Kingdom's CFP obligation and does not represent any increase in regulation.

Council Regulation (EEC) 345/92 amending for the 11th time Council Regulation (EEC) 3094/86 laying down certain technical measures for the conservation of fishery resources.

Council Regulation (EEC) 1465/96[1] amending for the 12th time Council Regulation (EEC) 3094/86 laying down certain technical measures for the conservation of fishery resources.

Council Regulation (EEC) 2120/92[1] amending for the 13th time Council Regulation (EEC) 3094/86 laying down certain technical measures for the conservation of fishery resources.

Council Regulation (EEC) 3034/92 amending for the 14th time Council Regulation (EEC) 3094/86 laying down certain technical measures for the conservation of fishery resources.

All these EEC Regulations are enforced in the United Kingdom by the Sea Fishing (Enforcement of Community Conservation Measures) Order 1986. SI 1986 No. 2090 (as amended).

[1] Council Regulations (EEC) 1465/92 and 2120.92 lapse on 31 December 1992 if not renewed.

The Fresh Meat (Hygiene & Inspection) Regulations 1992 (SI 1992 No. 2037). These Regulations replace all the previous GB legislation on slaughterhouse hygiene and meat inspection: 15 earlier SIs are revoked. They are however wider in scope than the earlier Regulations, since all cutting rooms and cold stores handling fresh meat are now affected.

Salmonella Controls: The Poultry Flocks, Hatcheries and Processed Animal Protein (Fees) Order 1992.

Food For Britain

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the chairmanship of Food for Britain.

Mr. Gummer: Mr. Paul Judge's recognition as chairman of Food from Britain will take effect on 31 December. He will be taking up his new appointment with the Conservative party organisation on 1 January. An announcement of his successor will be made in due course.

HEALTH

Health Service Funding

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what level of funds were provided per head of population in each district health authority and each family health services authority in each year since 1989-90.

Mr. Sackville: The allocation of funds to district health authorities is a matter for regional health authorities and detailed information is not collected centrally. The spending of family health services authorities is primarily demand-led and funded accordingly. However, information which relates to the expenditure of DHAs and FHSAs to their resident populations for the years 1989-90 and 1990-91 is shown in the table.

The figures, which pre-date the national health service reforms, show DHAs as providers rather than purchasers of health care. Expenditure per head of population therefore reflects patterns of local service provision and the effects of patient flows across health authority boundaries. Thus the figures for DHAs will tend to vary significantly.

Information for 1991-92 will be available shortly.

(a) Annual accounts of district health authorities and family health services authorities (formerly family practitioner committees)—1989-90 and 1990-91.

(b) Mid-year estimates of resident population—1989 and 1990 (Office of Population Censuses and Surveys/Department of Health).

Notes:

1. The figures for the district health authorities are based upon their total revenue expenditure on the services which they managed or accounted for in the relevant financial years. Capital expenditure incurred by district health authorities and all expenditure incurred by regional health authorities is excluded.
2. The figures for the family health services authorities cover their total expenditure on family health services and revenue expenditure on their administrative expenses. Expenditure on family health services (which is essentially regarded as current —ie revenue—expenditure) is included on a net basis as reported in annual accounts (ie after the deduction of charges to patients).

Elderly Population

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give her best estimates of the impact of the growing elderly population on health expenditure; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 27 November, at column 877.

Dental Treatment

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what rights NHS dental patients have to make a formal complaint about their treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: A national health service patient has the right to complain formally to the family health service authority on whose list the dentist is included about an alleged failure by the dentist to comply with his or her terms of service, or about the fit or efficiency of a denture provided for him or her by the dentist.

Hospitals

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list all those hospitals in England and Wales which have had more than £1 million spent on them since 1979, with the relevant figure;

(2) if she will list all the hospital building programmes currently under way in England.

(3) if she will list (a) all the new hospitals opened in England since 1979 and (b) the new hospitals planned to be completed by 2000.

Mr. Sackville: The Government attach the highest priority to improving and modernising the national health service estate, on which around £1·5 billion will be spent in the current year. Data are not held centrally for expenditure on individual hospitals, but information on NHS construction schemes in England costing over £1 million completed since 1979 is shown in the table which I have placed in the Library. The information is incomplete for schemes started prior to 1986, but the number of schemes recorded totals 666, with expenditure on construction cost totalling over £2·8 billion. I have also placed in the Library a table listing the 111 schemes costing over £1 million currently under construction. In total, some 400 schemes each costing more than £1 million are at various stages of planning, design and construction throughout the NHS in England.

Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Infant Mortality

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which region in England has the lowest infant mortality.

Mr. Sackville: The lowest infant mortality rate in England by regional health authority for 1991 is South West Thames, with 5·6 per 1,000 live births.

Teenage Pregnancies

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures are being taken to combat single teenage pregnancies in England.

Mr. Sackville: One of the main targets in the "Health of the Nation" White Paper is to reduce the rate of conceptions amongst the under-16s by at least 50 per cent. by the year 2000. Everyone—parents, health services, local authorities, the voluntary and education sectors and the Government—needs to work together to achieve this target. Measures which are effective in substantially reducing pregnancies in the under-16s can be expected to have a similar effect on unwanted pregnancies in the over-16s. A range of initiatives is under way both nationally and locally. These include comprehensive family planning services, ready access to professional advice suitable for young people and the provision of publications that will be helpful to both young people and their parents. Regional health authorities are currently reviewing national health service family planning services, with particular reference to the needs of the young. Grants have been awarded to enable voluntary organisations to carry forward projects related to the aims of "The Health of the Nation" White Paper. Responsibility for policy on sex education in schools is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education.

AIDS

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the figures for reported AIDS cases in England for 1989, 1990, 1991 and to date in 1992.

Mr. Sackville: The information is as follows:

	Number
1989	766
1990	1,183
1991	1,255
[1]1992	1,060

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many civil servants from her Department have been relocated from London to other parts of the United Kingdom (a) in the last five years and (b) in the last 10 years; and if she will list the locations to which those civil servants were relocated.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is as follows and is in terms of posts relocated.

Natural Medicines

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to appoint experts in homoeopathic, biochemic and anthroposophic medicines to (a) the staff of the Medicines Control Agency, (b) a committee constituted under section 14 of the Medicines Act 1968 to advise in technical matters and appeals and (c) the Medicines Commission in order to ensure the implementation of the EC directive on homoeopathic medicinal products; and when she plans to take action.

Mr. Sackville: The EC directive on homoeopathic products was adopted on 22 September 1992 for implementation by 31 December 1993. There are already professional staff within the Medicines Control Agency who are knowledgeable about homoeopathic medicines and expertise in these areas can be strengthened if this becomes necessary as a result of the directive.

It is anticipated that there will need to be access to independent expert advice on some applications, but the procedures and the structure and status of advisory bodies depends on many factors. Discussions are ongoing, both within the Department and with interested parties, on how best to develop channels whereby such advice on homoeopathic, anthroposophic and biochemic medicines can be made available to the agency and the licensing authority.

Residential Drug Projects

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will require the ring fencing of community care funding after April for residential drug and alcohol projects; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The special transitional grant totalling £565 million will be ring-fenced for implementation of all aspects of community care, including the purchase of services for alcohol and drug misuers.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received recently on local authorities wishing to provide disabled people with direct payments to make their own personal assistance arrangements; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: We have received one such representation from the Association of Directors of Social Services. There are no current plans to amend legislation in this way.

St. Bartholomew's Hospital

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will list the possible alternative uses of St. Bartholomew's hospital which have been proposed to her as part of the consultation on the Tomlinson proposals.

Dr. Mawhinney: The St. Bartholomew's shadow trust has put forward an alternative proposal to use the site primarily as a centre for specialist services. We are considering the future use of the hospital sites mentioned in the Tomlinson report, and will put forward our proposals for action in the new year. Any proposed changes in the use of hospital sites will be subject to formal consultation.

Paracetamol

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will refer to the relevant safety committee the issue of the placing of a limit on the number of paracetamol which may be sold over the counter in one pack or in one purchase; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: On the advice of the Medicines Commission, there are already limits on the size of the packs of paracetamol products which may be supplied from retail outlets. Packs containing more than 30 effervescent tablets, more than 25 tablets that are not effervescent and more than 10 sachets of powder and granules may be sold only from retail pharmacies. The Department's Medicines Control Agency will keep under review the need to seek further committee advice on controls on the sale of paracetamol, including pack size and numbers.

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what figures she has for the number of people who have committed or attempted suicide by use of paracetamol.

Mr. Sackville: The latest available figures for the number of people who have been recorded as having committed suicide and where paracetamol is mentioned in the records is shown in table 1. Table 2 combines the information provided in table 1 with information on the number of people where paracetamol is mentioned in the records and where it was undetermined whether death was accidentally or purposely inflicted. Both tables refer to England and Wales, and are for 1990; the latest year for which statistics are available.

Information pertaining to the number of people who have attempted suicide by use of paracetamol is not collected centrally.

Table 1. Numbers of recorded deaths from suicide where paracetamol is mentioned in the records. England and Wales, 1990. persons only.

	Total
Paracetamol	101	([1]5)
Paracetamol Prothiaden	1
Paracetamol Salicylate (NOS)	1
Paracetamol Temazepam Tricyclic Anti Depressant (NOS)	1
Paracetamol Triazolam	1
Paracetamol Warfarin	1

Table 2. Numbers of recorded deaths from suicide and undertermined whether accidentally or purposely inflicted where paracetamol is mentioned in the records. England and Wales. 1990, persons only.

	Total
Paracetamol	185	([1]13)
Paracetamol Propoxyphene	5	([1]1)
Paracetamol Propranolol	1
Paracetamol Prothiaden	1
Paracetamol Salicylate (NOS)	5	([1]1)
Paracetamol Temazepam Tricyclic Anti Depressant (NOS)	1
Paracetamol Triazolam	1
Paracetamol Warfarin	1
Paracetamol Verapamil	1

[1] Number of deaths with mention of alcohol.
NOS Not otherwise stated.

The inclusion of a substance in this list does not imply that it is necessarily toxic. Where two or more substances are mentioned together the contribution, if any, of each to the death is unknown; even where one substance is listed alone there may well be other factors with an important bearing on the death.

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what figures she has for the number of deaths from liver disease of which a part cause has been an earlier paracetamol overdose.

Mr. Sackville: In 1991 in England and Wales there were 25 recorded accidental deaths from liver disease of which a part cause was an earlier paracetamol overdose.

Essex Health Authorities

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what administrative cost savings will be made as a result of merging the North East Essex district health authorities with Mid-Essex.

Mr. Sackville: The proposals by North East Thames regional health authority to merge the three existing health authorities of North East Essex, Mid Essex and West Essex to create a new North Essex health authority have recently been the subject of public consultation. I understand that the regional health authority will be submitting its formal recommendations to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State shortly. It would not be appropriate for me to speculate on the level of administrative cost savings, but the effective use of resources is one of the criteria used in assessing the benefits of mergers.

NHS Pay

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will make it her policy to support the continued work of the pay review body for nurses, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine in order to provide objective evidence on comparative pay levels irrespective of any Government action to restrain pay in the short term.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Warrington South (Mr. Hall) on 30 November, at column 76.

Hyperbaric Units

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines she has issued to regional and district health authorities as to the referral of national health service patients to hyperbaric units; and if she will amend them to draw attention to the dangers of treatment by unqualified staff.

Mr. Sackville: Health notice (90)20, a copy of which is available in the Library, gives guidance. Training and standards of care are matters for the professions.

Orthodontic Dentists

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made on the number of orthodontic dentists required per 1·5 million people.

Dr. Mawhinney: No assessment has been made by the Department. The planning and provision of dental treatment is a matter for district health authorities to undertake jointly with family health services authorities.

Children's Homes

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the report of the Warner committee inquiry into the selection, development and management of staff in children's homes.

Mr. Yeo: We are publishing the report "Choosing with Care" today. Copies have been placed in the Vote Office and the Library. We welcome the report and its thorough and constructive analysis of the issues identified by the inquiry. Although there are many caring and dedicated staff working in children's homes, the Government are concerned about the serious deficiencies and weaknesses of existing personnel procedures and practices. The report is clear that poor selection procedures can result in the appointment of some staff who are unsuited to the care of children. It makes vitally important recommendations for early improvements to employers selection and appointment procedures which the Government accept. We are therefore acting immediately to inform local authorities and employers in the voluntary and private sectors of the committee's findings, so that they can make changes that are required. It is essential, in the interests of children, that these recommendations are implemented. We will be consulting with local authorities about how we can ensure that this happens.

The report raises other important issues that the Department will be considering carefully in consultation with the relevant parties.

HEALTH

Dental Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the family health services authorities which have (a) held no dental services committee meeting and (b) cancelled a meeting in each month since July.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 30 November 1992]: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists who have not given notice to leave the dental list have given written notice to each FHSA to deregister some or all of their continuing care arrangements for adult patients in each week since 8 July; how many dentists have deregistered patients; and how many patients have been deregistered.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 30 November 1992]: The information is contained in the tables. The tables give the number of dentists who have given written notice to the family health services authority of their intention to deregister adult patients under continuing care arrangements and the numbers of adults affected. Over the period 30 June 1992 to 30 September 1992, the total number of adult registrations has increased from 20,618,887 to 21,829,488.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists, who have not given notice to leave the dental list, have given written notice to each FHSA to terminate or deregister some or all of their capitation arrangements for child patients in each week since 8 July 1982; how many dentists have deregistered patients; and how many patients have been deregistered.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 30 November 1992]: The information is contained in the tables. The tables give the numbers of dentists who have given written notice to the family health services authorities of their intention to deregister child patients under capitation arrangements and the numbers of children affected. For the period 30 June 1992 to 30 September 1992, the total number of children covered by capitation payments has increased from 6,472,689 to 7,103,096.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists have given written notice to each FHSA to remove their name from the dental list in each week since 8 July; and what is the total for this period.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 30 November 1992]: The information requested is contained in the table. The total number of dentists who have given written notice to family health services authorities to remove their names from the dental list since 3 July is 120. Additions to the list in the period 30 June to 30 September mean that overall, there was a decrease of 15 dentists.

Personal Social Services Authorities

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing for each personal social services authority (i) the 1993-94 standard spending assessment for PSS on which the Government are consulting, (ii) the percentage difference between the proposed standard spending assessment and (a) the 1992-93 standard spending assessment and (b) the 1992-93 budget estimate, and (iii) the year on year change in each authority's total budget permitted by the Government's provisional capping criteria for 1993-94.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 30 November 1992]: The 1993-94 standard spending assessment for PSS and the percentage differences between that proposed standard spending assessment and the 1992-93 standard spending assessment and the 1992-93 budget estimate are shown in the table. The year-on-year change in each authority's total budget permitted by the Government's provisional capping criteria for 1993-94 will shortly be made available in the Library by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

The Government announced on 26 November 1992 that the spending for local authority personal social services in 1993-94 would be £5,585 million, an increase of 15 per cent. over the figure for 1992-93 of £4,850 million. This includes £5,020 million for existing responsibilities —a rise of 3·5 per cent.—and £565 million for the community care special transitional grant. The grant based on the total announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 2 October and totalling £538·6 million is shown in the table and has been added to the 1993-94 SSA for the purpose of comparison with 1992-93 budgets. This grant will be increased further once the distribution of additional funding to take account of change to the independent living fund has been decided.

A circular was issued to all local authorities LASSL(9212 which gave indicative figures for the community care special transitional grant. Since the circular was issued it has been discovered that there was a technical error in the calculation. The figures included in this answer are now correct. A new circular will be issued later this week.

The 1993-94 PSS standard spending assessments are based on the latest population estimates derived from the 1991 census. For some authorities the previous population estimates based on the 1981 census were too high and as a consequence the new population estimates lead to a decrease in the 1993-94 PSS standard spending assessments. We believe that it is correct and fair to all authorities to use the most up-to-date information available to calculate the standard spending assessments.

The final column in the table illustrates the wide variation in local decisions on spending. The standard spending assessments are not hypothecated for individual services and it is for local authorities to decide on their own level of expenditure on individual service areas, taking account of local priorities as well as legislative and other pressures when setting budgets.

DEFENCE

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civil servants are currently employed by his Department (a) in London, (b) in Scotland and (c) elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Aitken: At 1 October 1992, the Ministry of Defence employed 134,907 full and part-time civil servants in the United Kingdom, broken down as follows:

	Number
London	17,846
Scotland	11,907
Elsewhere in the United Kingdom	105,154

Cnewr Estate

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields on 27 November, Official Report, columns 892-93, when he intends to publish the notice of proposed development under Department of the Environment circular 18/84 concerning his Ministry's plans for the Cnewr estate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Discussions with the trustees of the Cnewr estate regarding future arrangements for Army adventurous training are at an early stage. It is not possible to say when a notice of proposed development might be published.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, columns 892-93, if he will give the cost of his Ministry's agreement with the Cnewr estate in the Brecon Beacons national park in pounds per hectare per year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No formal agreement between MOD and the Cnewr estate exists at present. Payment in respect of any such agreement would be considered commercial in confidence.

Ship Charters

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each of the last five years, including the current year, the amount spent on chartering merchant ships and the number of charterings; if he will indicate for each year the number of charters with British registered ships; and if he will make a statement on his policy for chartering Merchant Navy ships.

Mr. Aitken: Wherever possible, commercial vessels chartered by the Ministry of Defence are obtained from the open market and on the basis of cost, availability and suitability. As many shipowners as possible, both British and foreign, are made aware of the Department's requirements. Value for money takes a high priority in the evaluation of bids. Information on the number of vessels chartered and the cost is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Cnewr Estate

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, columns 892-93, when his Ministry learnt that the National Park Authority had been pursuing an access agreement on the Cnewr estate in the Brecon Beacons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department first became aware of discussions between the trustees of the Cnewr estate and the National Park Authority in May this year.

Waste Disposal

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 October, Official Report, column 508, where his Department's waste disposal sites are to be located; what consultations his Department has had with local authorities about these sites; what progress has been made in constructing a purpose-built ammunition disposal facility; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Land-based disposal of redundant munitions, explosive waste and residues is currently carried out by the MOD at the central ammunition depots at Kineton and Longtown. Other sites include the Otterburn, Sennybridge and Salisbury Plain training areas. Disposals are also carried out at established MOD sites that have been in use for many years and operate within specified explosives limits which take account of strict safety and environmental considerations and regulations. There are no plans to open new MOD demolition sites. Warwickshire county council and Stratford upon Avon district council are, however, being consulted on plans to construct a purpose-built tri-service disposal facility at the central ammunition depot at Kineton. The MOD is also considering extending private sector involvement in the disposal of redundant munitions, but no decisions have been taken.

Dumping at Sea

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the substances which his Department currently disposes of by dumping at sea giving the quantities for 1991 in each case; how each substance will be disposed of as from January 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence has no future plans to dispose of redundant munitions by sea dumping. In the past, preparation for munitions for sea dumping included the removal of components containing toxic heavy metals where this was practicable. Bulk stocks of explosives, propellants, detonators and certain specialised munitions types were prohibited from disposal at sea. In 1991 the Ministry of Defence disposed of 1,093 tonnes of redundant munitions by sea dumping. This material comprised inert packaging, metal casing, conventional explosives (nitros/nitrates) and propellants (double-base/composite/cellulosic) but it would involve disproportionate cost to identify the particular substances involved. In the future, such material will be disposed of on land at suitable MOD sites which already handle ammunition disposal and under contract by industry. The Ministry of Defence plans, also, to construct a purpose built ammunition disposal facility.

Yugoslavia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many financial and administrative staff are currently deployed in the former Yugoslavia; if he will outline their roles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Within British forces there are 27 personnel, both service and civilian, employed on financial or administrative duties. Their role is to support the deployment in the areas of public information, postal and courier service, contracts, financial monitoring and accounts, and ensure that soldiers' circumstances are properly recorded and any pay and allowance matters promptly dealt with.

Forces' Clothing

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent on clothing for each of the armed forces for each of the last five years, indicating how much was spent on exports in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Expenditure on clothing by the armed forces in each of the last five years is as shown. The figures for each service include the cost of clothing bought on behalf of the others. None of the clothing was purchased for onward sale by export.

	Navy £ million	Army £ million	RAF £ million

Field Army

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) tanks, (b) armoured combat vehicles, (c) armoured combat vehicle lookalikes and (d) artillery pieces are currently deployed in the field Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The quantities of equipment, as defined under the terms of the conventional forces in Europe—CFE—treaty, currently deployed in the field Army are:

	Number
Tanks	472
Armoured Combat Vehicles	1,865
Armoured Combat Vehicle Lookalikes	970
Artillery Pieces	281

Expenditure

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the defence expenditure figures for each year from 1974-75 to 1986-87 in (a) cash prices and (b) real terms using the method of calculation used in table 2A.5 of the "Autumn Statement" 1992.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Defence expenditure figures in outturn and constant prices, and adjusted to include the technical changes outlined in paragraphs 2B-7 to 2B-12 of the "Autumn Statement", are not available for the period 1974-75 to 1977-78 and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Adjusted outturn figures for 1978-79 to 1986-87 will be published in the "Statistical Supplement to the Autumn Statement" early in 1993.

RNAC Coulport

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what compensation has been paid to, or agreed with Tarmac Ltd. over delays in work at the Royal Navy armaments depot at Coulport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: No settlement has been reached with Tarmac Ltd. Details of negotiations with the company and of sums paid on account in respect of work completed are commercially confidential.

Iraqi and Iranian Nationals

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there are (a) any Iraqi or (b) Iranian nationals currently training in British military establishments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Underwater Test Centre

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye concerning the future of the British underwater test and evaluation centre range at Kyle of Lochalsh, Ross-shire, if he will clarify what role he envisages for the base facilities and its functions beyond the five-year period indicated; whether a management staff tender for those functions being tested in the market will have preparatory professional advice and support available to it from within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I have written to the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye to advise him that a recent study has recommended that the operation at the British underwater test and evaluation centre (BUTEC), at the Kyle of Lochalsh, will be market-tested in accordance with stated policy to examine ways of improving efficiency and value for money throughout the Government. Many of the activities of the range are already managed by industry, and the new initiative will mainly affect the afloat services (boats and crews) currently provided by the chief executive (Marine Services) of the Ministry of Defence. In-house bids will be encouraged and, within the constraints of Government policy, professional advice and support will be made available to the chief executive (Marine Services) for him to construct an in-house bid. The future of the base beyond the five-year period addressed by the market-testing exercise will have to be determined nearer the time, and will depend on the defence requirement as then identified. However, we expect that the need to test and evaluate torpedoes and other underwater systems will continue for the foreseeable future.

HMS Drake

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of maintaining and staffing the decompression chamber at HMS Drake for 24 hours.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: When in use, the cost of maintaining and staffing the decompression chamber at HMS Drake for 24 hours is about £600.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Market Testing

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his estimate of the number of civil service jobs likely to be lost as a consequence of market testing.

Mr. Waldegrave: Market testing is not about abolishing jobs but about testing whether services performed in-house or by the private sector offer better value for money.

Until the outcome of individual market testing exercises is known, it is not possible to say whether the question of job losses will arise.

Where, in the past, contracting out has offered best value for money, in most cases staff have been taken on by the contractor, or they have been redeployed by their Department or absorbed through natural wastage.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many civil servants are currently employed by his Department (a) in London and (b) elsewhere.

Mr. Brooke: The total number of permanent staff in the Department of National Heritage is 862. This figure includes 352 in the Historic Royal Palaces Agency—HRPA. All are based in London.

The total number of casual staff in the Department is 73. This figure includes 69 in the HRPA. All are based in London.

National Lottery

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the impact of a national lottery on employment in the pools industry.

Mr. Brooke: Employment levels in the pools industry are dependent on many factors and are a matter for the pools companies. Estimates of the effects of the national lottery on the level of pools turnover are subject to a series of hypotheses.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the impact of the proposed national lottery on employment in Scotland.

Mr. Brooke: It is too early to say precisely what jobs will be created by the introduction of the national lottery and where they will be located.

Longford Hall

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 16 November, Official Report, column 43, what actions were taken by his Department or its predecessors following receipt of letters dated 7 December 1991, 20 May 1992 and 17 August 1992 regarding disrepair of Longford hall, from the hon. Member for Stretford; what consideration was given to an inspection by English Heritage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I refer to the answers I gave on 16 November 1992, Official Report, column 43. Longford hall is in the first instance the responsibility of its owners, Trafford metropolitan borough council: I understand that consideration is still being given to possible new uses for the building.

St. Anne's Hotel, Buxton

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what action he is taking to ensure that the necessary structural repairs are carried out to the former St. Anne's hotel, the Crescent, Buxton.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has today authorised the service on the owners, Capitalrise Ltd, of a notice under section 48 of the Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1990 specifying the works which he considers reasonably necessary for the proper preservation of the building and notifying them that, if these are not carried out within three months, he may begin proceedings for the compulsory purchase of the building under section 47.

Royal Palaces

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the publicly owned works of art in royal palaces which have not been on public exhibition.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 7 December 1992]: A list of works of art in the royal collection held in trust for the nation which have not been on public exhibition is not available. However, a large proportion of works of art from the royal collection are on permanent public display at Hampton Court palace, Kensington palace, the state apartments at Windsor castle, Osborne house, the palace of Holyroodhouse, Kew palace, the banqueting hall and the national gallery. Other paintings are on periodic display at the Queen's gallery in Buckingham palace and the Queen's private residence at Balmoral and Sandringham. In addition, about 500 paintings have been loaned to exhibitions in the United Kingdom and abroad over the last five years.

Theatres Restoration Fund

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what are the guidelines for the theatres restoration fund and for application eligibility; and what conditions are imposed as to the age of the building on behalf of which an application is to be made.

Mr. Key [holding answer 4 December]: The purpose, scope and eligibility criteria of the theatres restoration fund are set out in "Notes for Applicants", copies of which

I am sending to my hon. Friend and placing in the Library of the House. In essence, the criteria are that only purpose-built theatres are eligible; that they must be constituted as charitable trusts; and that they should be of architectural merit and/or that the work produced in the theatre is of artistic significance. There are no specific conditions relating to the age of a building.

Windsor Castle

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what delay experienced by the county fire brigade in reaching the fire at Windsor castle was due to the presence of soldiers carrying out band and other ceremonial duties.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 3 December 1992]: I understand that the Royal Berkshire fire and rescue service encountered no such delay.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Dangerous Dogs

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice is given to police forces regarding identification of dog types in relation to prosecutions under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office issued guidance to the police about the identification of specially controlled dogs shortly before the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 came into force in August 1991. Chief officers of police were also sent posters giving further indication of typical size and range of colouring of pit bull terriers.

In a Home Office circular containing further advice on the 1991 Act, issued this year, the attention of the police was drawn to a list, provided by the Staffordshire Bull Terrier Breed Council, of clubs which are willing to offer advice where there is any doubt about whether a particular dog is a Staffordshire bull terrier. This is the type with which the pit bull terrier is most commonly confused.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding problems arising from the operation of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We regularly receive representations from hon. Members, animal welfare bodies and other organisations and individuals about the 1991 Act. There is also regular contact with the enforcement authorities on various aspects of the operation of the Act. We shall continue to listen carefully to those who wish to offer constructive comments.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimate of the cost of keeping dogs in kennels during the course of appeals in relation to prosecutions under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information relating to the total cost of keeping dogs in kennels pending the outcome of appeals under the 1991 Act is not collected centrally. Kennelling costs may vary around the country. However I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the cost of kennelling one dog for one day in the London area is about £8.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the cost to date of prosecutions under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991; how much has been paid to the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and Scottish Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals; and what other organisations have received payment.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on the costs to the police, local authorities, the Crown prosecution service and the courts of prosecutions under the 1991 Act is not available centrally.

The Home Office has not made any payments to the RSPCA or the SSPCA. At the time the exemption scheme was coming into effect, payments were made to the Index of Exempted Dogs, which administers the exemption scheme established under the Act, in respect of reminder letters issued by the index to the owners of specially controlled dogs who had registered with the police but who had not at that time completed the exemption process. The index also received revenue from fees collected in respect of applications made for certificates of exemption.

Betting

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultation is taking place or is planned with betting shop employees about proposals to introduce evening off-course betting.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We issued a consultation document in October 1991 inviting the views of all interested parties, including betting office employees, on whether licensed betting offices should be open in the evening and, if so, at what times. We are giving careful consideration to views received in response to that document, including those from betting office employees, and will announce our conclusions as soon as possible.

Drugs

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what part of Wales has the highest per capita conviction rate for drug offences in Wales;

(2) what percentage of convictions in Wales (a) involving under-18s and (b) in total, are for drug-related offences.

Mr. Jack: Information for 1991, which is provisional, is given in the tables.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the percentage increase in the amount of cocaine seized in the United Kingdom over the last 10 years.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is contained in table 1.1 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Statistics of Drugs Seizures and Offenders dealt with, United Kingdom, 1991", a copy of which is in the Library. The table shows that in 1981, 21 kg of cocaine was seized; in 1991 the corresponding amount was 1,078 kg, representing a proportional increase of 5,133 per cent.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much crack cocaine was seized in the United Kingdom in 1991-92.

Mr. Jack: There were 583 recorded seizures of the type of cocaine known as "crack" in the United Kingdom during 1991. These weighed 1.9 kg. Data for 1992 are not yet available.

Immigration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the maximum number of individuals who at any one time will be detained under Immigration Act powers at Her Majesty's prison Kidlington; and when the proposed use of Her Majesty's prison Kidlington for the detention of individuals under Immigration Act powers will commence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The use of the vacant Prison Service establishment at Campsfield house, Kidlington is one of the options being considered for additional accommodation for Immigration Act detainees. No final decision has yet been taken as to when or whether Campsfield house will be brought into use for this purpose.

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civil servants from his Department have been relocated from London to other parts of the United Kingdom (a) in the last five years and (b) in the last 10 years; and to where they were relocated.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The numbers of Home Office posts relocated during the periods specified are as follows:

	Number
(a) in the last five years
to Birmingham	80
Derby	5
Glasgow	200
Liverpool	275
Nottingham	120
Total	680
(b) in the last 10 years the total above, plus to Bootle	300
Grand total	980

Figures on the proportion of these posts filled by relocating civil servants, as opposed to local recruitment, cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Terrorism

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to grant the police further powers to help them deal with the threat of terrorism.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is essential that the police have the necessary powers to deal with terrorism and it is for this reason that the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 remains in force. This and other measures are kept under review.

Young Offenders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) 16-year-olds, (b) 15-year-olds and (c) 14-year-olds have been held in an adult prison for more than 24 hours after being convicted of (i) a section 53 offence under the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 any (ii) and other offence in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not recorded centrally. The readily available data are given in the table.

Underground Emergency Facilities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) further to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, columns 849-50, how Her Majesty's Government will be able to dispose of the underground facilities for which he has no plans to permit use for purposes not related to wartime or other emergencies;

(2) further to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, columns 849-50, if he will give fresh consideration to the uses to which the underground facilities might be put; and if he will provide a list of uses which Her Majesty's Government are willing to (a) permit or (b) encourage in the event of the facilities being disposed of.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We do not propose to use or to develop these sites for alternative purposes. The normal rules for disposal will be followed including, where necessary, first offering sites back to the current or previous owner. Other sites will be placed for sale on the open market. The use to which they are put after disposal will be a matter for whoever acquires them.

Prison Education Service

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out his future plans for the prison education service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Prison Service has invited competitive tenders for the provision of education to inmates in prisons and young offender institutions in England and Wales, for which it is responsible, with effect from 1 April 1993. The present arrangements have to be changed because local education authorities, who currently provide education in prisons, lose most of their responsibilities for further education from that date. They will no longer be primarily responsible for a range of courses, including those leading to vocational training, GCSE and A-level courses, basic literacy courses in English, basic mathematics, English as a second language, and courses to teach independent living and communication skills. These make up the core of most education programmes in prisons.

The Government have made clear in the White Paper "Custody, Care and Justice", Cm. 1647, that education is an essential part of the opportunities which must be provided in a prison. Through more detailed specification of prisoners' requirements, establishment by establishment, by competition between the public and private sector and by rigorous monitoring, the Prison Service should be better able to ensure the future education provision offers value for money and is of a consistently high quality.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the application of the acquired rights directive on his plans to privatise the prison education service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government are not privatising the provision of education services to prison establishments in England and Wales. The purpose of competitive tendering is to stimulate new and better ways of carrying out existing tasks by inviting tenders from both the public and the private sector. The contracts will be placed with those who offer the best combination of quality and price.

On the application of the EEC acquired rights directive 77/187, I would refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to his question on 1 December, at column 98, and to the reply that my hon. Friend, the Minister of State, Department of Employment, gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn) on 19 November, at columns 338-39. I am also placing in the Library of the House copies of guidance which, following legal advice, the Prison Service has sent to those tendering for the provision of educational services in prisons and of guidance which the Department for Education has issued on the application of the directive to staff transferring from the employment of a local education authority to a further education corporation under the provisions of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many scientific procedures on living animals have been undertaken without anaesthesia since 1986.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is published in table 21 of the "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals 1991", a copy of which is in the Library. Information for 1986 relates to animal experiments under the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many scientific procedures were carried out on living animals in the first half of 1992 and for the first half of each year since 1986.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on the number of scientific procedures is collected only for whole years and is published in table 23 of the Command Paper "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain 1991", Cm 2023, a copy of which is in the Library.

Information for 1986 relates to animal experiments under the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876, which was replaced on 1 January 1987 by the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. The 1986 Act not only encompasses work covered by the 1876 Act, but extends to some work not previously controlled.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many scientific procedures on living animals in the United Kingdom have bred animals with harmful genetic defects or transgenic animals since 1986.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is contained in table 15 of the Command Paper "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain" for each year since 1987, and table 6 or 7 of the HMSO publication "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Northern Ireland", copies of which are in the Library.

Information with respect to transgenic animals is not available before 1990. Also, from 1990 inclusive the method of counting the production of animals with harmful genetic defects changed, so it is not possible to make a direct comparison of data from before and after that date.

Information for the year 1986 is not available since the procedures described were not regulated by the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876, which was then in force.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to revise the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A number of revisions to the 1986 Act will be made during 1993.

The Government announced on 3 December, at column 336, in response to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler), that we have accepted the majority view of the Animal Procedures Committee that the common octopus or Octopus vulgaris should be brought within the controls of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

As reported in the annual report of the Animal Procedures Committee for 1991, schedule 1 to the Act, which sets out those methods of humane killing which do not require project or personal licence authority, is currently being revised.

We shall also be adding quail—coturnix coturnix—to schedule 2 to the Act, which lists those animals for use in scientific procedures which may be obtained only from designated breeding or supplying establishments. This is in order to ensure that the United Kingdom complies fully with the requirements of EC directive 86/609.

Motor Cycle Noise

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prosecutions have taken place in each year since 1983 for breaches of noise limits by motor cycles;

(2) how many prosecutions have taken place of suppliers of open exhaust systems for motor cycles in each year since 1983.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not available centrally.

New Prison

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish a list of all of the sites which have been considered for the site of a new prison in the north-west region of England since 1984.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not readily available in the form requested, but, where there would be no breach of commercial confidentiality in doing so, I will write to the hon. Member with details of Merseyside sites considered prior to the purchase of land at Fazakerley.

Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning clause 9 of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill on the right of visitors, short-term and prospective students and their dependants.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Between 22 October and 7 December the Home Office has received representations about clause 9 of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill from approximately 25 organisations and individuals.

Terrorist Attacks

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take urgent steps to facilitate the setting up of a fund to insure victims of terrorist attacks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The criminal injuries compensation scheme provides compensation for personal injuries suffered by the innocent victims of violent crime. So far as commercial property is concerned, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is considering representations from the insurance industry and other interested parties.

Racial Violence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation whereby racial violence would be a specific criminal offence, along the lines recommended by the Commission for Racial Equality.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The recommendations in the Commission for Racial Equality's second review of the Race Relations Act have wide-ranging implications for a number of Government Departments. A response to the idea of a new offence of racial violence will be made as part of the Government's response to the CRE review as a whole.

Young Offenders (Self-harm)

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many acts of deliberate self-harm by young offenders were recorded in each year since 1986; and how many young offenders died as a result in each of those years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 26 November 1992]: Information about the incidence of deliberate self-harm prior to 1991 is not available. The numbers of prisoners aged under 21 who deliberately harmed themselves in 1991 was 1,156. Figures for 1992 are not yet available.

The number of prisoners under the age of 21 who died as the result of an act of deliberate self-harm in each year since 1986 is shown in the table.

Deaths by prisoners aged under 21 years resulting from an act of deliberate self-harm 1986-1992 (to 19 November)

Directive 89/816/EURATOM

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on what steps have been taken by his Department to implement the European Community directive 89/816/EURATOM.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

Regulations which implement European Community directive 89/618/EURATOM were laid before the House on 8 December 1992. These regulations entitled "Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations 1993" are expected to come into force on 1 January 1993.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Morbidity and Mortality Levels

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information the Overseas Development Administration collects on the levels of morbidity and mortality in countries to which Her Majesty's Government send aid moneys or provide support technology and assistance.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Overseas Development Administration uses data produced and analysed by developing country Governments, the UN and its agencies, other international organisations and academic bodies. The ODA itself does not collect morbidity and mortality data but has provided technical and financial assistance to both countries and UN agencies to support the collection and dissemination of such data.

Tanzania

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 9 November, Official Report, columns 553-54, when the Tanga Port rehabilitation project in Tanzania began; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Six contractors have been prequalified for the civil works at Tanga Port. Tender documents are now being finalised. A contract for the rehabilitation of four quayside cranes will be negotiated with the original manufacturer. It is planned that project implementation will start in the earlier part of 1993.

Gabon

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been received from Friends of the Earth over the World bank-funded forestry and environment project for Gabon; and what reply has been sent.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A representative of Friends of the Earth raised concerns about the forestry and environment project in Gabon with senior officials of the ODA in September. Through a subsequent exchange of correspondence, Friends of the Earth has been advised that World bank staff have been asked to respond to the issues raised in a memorandum prepared by some non-governmental organisations.

Malawi

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by Friends of the Earth to the United Kingdom's executive director at the World bank on the subject of the recently approved Malawi Power loan V; and what reply has been sent.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are not aware of any representations made by Friends of the Earth in connection with the Malawi Powr V project which was approved by the World bank's executive board in June 1992.

Bosnia

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the visit to Bosnia by the permanent secretary of the Overseas Development Administration.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Copies of the visit report by Mr. Tim Lankester, Permanent Secretary of the ODA, have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

World Bank

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to publish, on a monthly basis, details of those structural adjustment loans which are being considered by the World bank and which are listed in the World bank's operational review.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have made arrangements for a copy of the World bank's operational summary of proposed projects to be made available in the Libraries of the House. This document contains information on all loans, including those related to structural adjustment, which are being considered by the bank.

EDUCATION

Post-16 Education

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of children in the United Kingdom remain in full-time education beyond the age of 16 years; and if he will tabulate the United Kingdom figures alongside those for other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Forsyth: The available information is given in the table.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will indicate the comparable levels of literacy and numeracy for 16 to 18-year-olds in the United Kingdom and other OECD countries.

Mr. Forman: Information on levels of literacy and numeracy among 16 to 18-year-olds in the United Kingdom is not available centrally. However, the adult literacy and basic skills unit estimates that 5·5 million adults in England and Wales have some difficulty with reading, writing, spelling and basic mathematics. It does not, however, have a basis for making comparisons with other countries.

Expenditure

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of gross domestic product was spent on education in the current fiscal year for (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Forman: The readily available information is as follows:

School Transport

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what provision is being made for transport for children attending grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Forth: Local education authorities have a statutory duty to provide free transport for pupils who attend grant-maintained schools for whom they consider it necessary, and the power to assist other pupils. Information on LEAs' schools transport arrangements is not collected centrally, but they must treat GM pupils no less favourably as regards transport than pupils who attend schools maintained by an LEA.

School Catering

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what independent assessment has been made of the standards of school catering since the introduction of local authority competitive tendering.

Mr. Forth: We are aware of no study on the effects of compulsory competitive tendering on the standards of school catering. CCT should represent an opportunity for improving the quality of school meals as it places greater emphasis on specifying the standards which services are expected to meet. This was recognised in the report "Nutritional Guidelines for Schools" published by the Caroline Walker Trust on 24 November.

Popular Schools

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what provision is being made to meet an increase in demand for places at schools which have demonstrated the best results in recently published league tables.

Mr. Forth: In distributing capital resources we already give a high priority to providing new places where demand is rising, though in doing so we also take account of any surplus places in the area.

In addition, the powers my right hon. Friend proposes in the Education Bill will also facilitate imaginative rationalisation schemes, which will create further opportunity recognising the needs of popular schools.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what selection criteria will be set for the selection of pupils at more popular schools.

Mr. Forth: Admission arrangements in maintained schools are the responsibility of the governing body or local education authority, depending on the nature of the school. Admission arrangements for grant-maintained schools must be approved by the Secretary of State. The criteria established for deciding between pupils if the school is oversubscribed must be clear, reasonable and objective; and consistent with the established character of the school.

The Department plans to consult shortly on updated guidance to schools and LEAs on admission arrangements.

Higher Education

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the rate for the numbers of higher education in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Forman: The readily available figures are shown in the table.

New entrants[1] to higher education, 1988

[1]Includes full-time and part-time students entering higher education for the first time i.e. excluding postgraduate students and others already having a qualification in higher education. Not all other countries may adhere to this general definition.

[2]To aid comparison and overcome the problem of the varying lengths of courses in different countries the participation rate is the percentage of all new entrants (defined above) to a derived relevant single year group. The latter is calculated by taking the total populations for the ages providing at least 70 per cent. of the new entrants and dividing by the number of ages involved. For the United Kingdom this is the population of ages 18 to 21 divided by 4. OECD recommend this procedure.

[3]Excludes the private sector and students from abroad. Includes nursing and paramedical students at Health Department establishments.

[4]Excludes Technical and Further Education (TAFE).

[7]The (b) rate shown includes data for advanced special training schools (SENSHU's) which may be equivalent to sub-degree higher education.

[8]Full-time only and excludes Open University.

[9]Excluding one-year courses, which may be below level 5.

[10]The (b) rate excludes students on two-year courses, some of which may not be equivalent to sub-degree higher education.

Examination Results, Liverpool

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from schools in Liverpool about the recent publication of exam results.

Mr. Forth: None.

Further Education

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will set out by local education authority (a) the actual spending on further education and sixth-form colleges for the financial year 1991-92, (b) the planned spending on further education and sixth-form colleges for the financial year 1992-93, (c) the standard spending assessment—SSA—for further education and sixth-form colleges for the financial year 1992-93 and (d) the amount deducted from the standard spending assessment for further education and sixth-form colleges for the financial year 1993-94.

Mr. Forman: Information about (a) is not yet available. In respect of (b), the Government have calculated for each local education authority a further education adjustment for the purposes of proposing a relevant notional amount. These proposed adjustments are set out in the table. So far as (c) is concerned, authorities' SSAs for 1992-93 do not identify an element for further education and sixth-form colleges. As for (d), there has been no deduction from 1993-94 SSAs for further education and sixth-form colleges. The 1993-94 education standard spending total from which the education component of SSAs is derived covers only those functions for which LEAs will be responsible from 1 April 1993.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what spending per student in further education colleges was in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93, in cash terms and in a real-terms index with 1979-80 as the base year.

Mr. Forman: Expenditure per student in further education colleges for financial years 1979-80, 1989-90 and 1990-91, the latest year available, are shown in the table.

Financial years	1979-80	1989-90	1990-91
Expenditure per student (fte)
Cash terms (£)	1,540	2,780	2,920
Real terms index[1]	100	90	88

[1] The real terms index has been calculated using the current Gross Domestic Product Deflators.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what part of the provision to be made available to the Further Education Funding Council is directly related to student numbers in both cash terms and as a percentage in 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96; and on what assumptions this figure is calculated.

Mr. Forman: In order to encourage efficiency in the achievement of increased student numbers, part of the provision to be made available to the Further Education Funding Council will be directly related to actual student numbers and will be paid from a non cash-limited vote. This element of funding will be introduced in the academic year 1993-94 and will be limited initially to full-time students. The total amount to be made available in this element will be the product of the actual number of full-time students and a rate per student of £750 a year. The rate per student and the scope of funding in later years will be subject to review.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what part of the proposed expenditure total for further education in 1993-94 is assumed to be spending per student in both cash terms and in a real terms index with 1979-80 as the base year; and what are the figures for 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Mr. Forman: The total funding made available to the Further Education Funding Council—FEFC—in 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96 for recurrent expenditure is planned to be £2,550 million, £2,734 million and £2,944 million respectively. The FEFC has announced that from the 1993-94 total it intends to make available to colleges £2,507 million. On the basis of the Government's projection of 970,000 full-time equivalent students for whom provision will be made by the FEFC in 1993-94, the level of support per student would be some £2,600

Figures for 1979-80 are not available on a comparable basis.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education pursuant to his answer of 16 November, Official Report, column 42, what assumptions and information about the current level of fundings by local education authorities of courses for which the Further Education Funding Council will be responsible from 1993 were made on deciding the level of funds to be made available to the Further Education Funding Council in 1993-94.

Mr. Forman: In reaching a notional apportionment of local education authorities' spending on education in 1992-93, the Government assumed that their recurrent spending in that year on activities which from 1993-94 would be the responsibility of the Further Education Funding Council would appropriately be £2,341 million. This assumption took account of the latest available expenditure data and student, pupil, lecturer and teacher numbers. It also took account of the findings of a special survey of LEA spending on further education.

Health Education

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will reconsider his decision to withdraw the 60 per cent. funding for health education co-ordinators from local education authorities from March 1993; and if he will provide information about the numbers of school children who smoke.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend's decision, which is now final, to discontinue the grant for education support and training programme for preventive health education at the end of the current financial year, was relayed to local education authorities through the Department's circular 10/92 which issued on 13 August.

A Health Education Authority/MORI survey undertaken in 1989 of nine to 15-year-olds in England, suggested that about 200,000 young people had become regular smokers by the age of 15.

Rudolf Steiner Schools

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consideration he has given to (a) the resolution of the European Parliament on freedom of education, dated 14 March 1984, (b) the right to education in Article 1 (b) of the declaration of fundamental rights and freedoms of 12 April 1989, and (c) article 63 of the concluding document of the Vienna meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, dated 15 January 1989, in drawing up his policy on the funding of Rudolf Steiner education in Rudolf Steiner schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: My right hon. Friend is aware of the various provisions referred to, but he does not consider that they require the Government to fund any particular form of independent education, including Steiner schools.

Unemployed Students

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what specific financial incentives have been given to the Further Education Funding Council to increase participation by unemployed students in education courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: The Government's expenditure plans for further education will allow for a 25 per cent. increase in student numbers, and hence a significant increase in participation, over the period 1993-94 to 1995-96. The funding for the Further Education Funding Council will allow colleges to continue the arrangements for fee remission for students such as those who are unemployed, which are currently operated by local education authorities. The council will shortly be issuing a consultative document on options for a funding method for 1994-95 onwards which will address funding issues related to widening access and meeting the needs of different client groups.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Union

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria were used in deciding which aspects of the treaty on European union to omit from the summary pamphlet "Britain in Europe".

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The pamphlet "Britain in Europe" provides a straightforward but accurate picture of the European Community and the Maastricht treaty.

Mohammed Afzal

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 428, what reports the high commission in Islamabad has received from the Pakistan authorities concerning the progress of the investigation into the murder of Mohammed Afzal in Jaurah village, Pakistan, on 4 October.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British high commission in Islamabad have not yet received a report from the Pakistan authorities. They are in close touch with the Pakistan police, and I will write to the hon. Member as soon as we have a report.

Iraq

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement outlining the links which have been established to date between his Department and the Iraqi Kurdish National Assembly; and if he has any plans to place a diplomatic representative in Iraqi Kurdistan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A delegation from the Iraqi Kurdish National Assembly is at present visiting London. They will meet my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development and officials.

We have no plans to place a diplomatic representative in northern Iraq.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to maintain the air umbrella over northern Iraq.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The air umbrella over northern Iraq plays an important role in preserving the safety and well-being of the people of northern Iraq. The decision on its renewal rests with the Turkish National Assembly. We have been in close touch with the Turkish Government about this. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister discussed this issue with the Turkish Prime Minister during his visit to London last month.

Sudan

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Sudan Government about persecutions of non-Muslims in that country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have made clear to the Sudanese Government our abhorrence of the systematic abuses of human rights throughout Sudan, and the importance we attach to respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of religion. We co-sponsored the United Nations General Assembly resolution on the human rights situation in Sudan, adopted on 4 December.

Macedonia

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to date during the United Kingdom Presidency of the European Community to the Government of Greece concerning the official recognition of Macedonia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Mr. Robin O'Neill, as personal representative of the Foreign Secretary, has regularly visited Athens and Skopje. He has held talks in both capitals in an effort to find a formula which will permit recognition for Macedonia in accordance with the Lisbon declaration.

Albania

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will inform the Albanian Government that British aid is conditional on the ending of public executions in that country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In deciding aid policy for individual countries, we take into account a number of factors relating to good Government, including human rights. Where improvements are needed we make our views clear to the country concerned. Our aim is to influence the government in whatever ways are most appropriate. The suspension of United Kingdom and EC aid, designed to relieve extreme hardship, would not necessarily be an effective way of improving human rights in Albania.

Western Sahara

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the current developments in western Sahara following the visit of President Abdelaziz of Sadr.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Mr. Mohamed Abdelaziz called on a senior official at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 27 November. We took this opportunity to reiterate our support for the United Nations settlement plan and the efforts of the United Nations Secretary-General and his special representative to overcome the problems which have delayed the holding of a referendum.

Angola

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the United Nations on the post-election situation in Angola; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 3 December 1992]: We have been actively involved in United Nations Security Council discussions on the situation in Angola. On 30 November, the council adopted Security Council resolution 793 which extended until 31 January 1993 the role of the United Nations Angolan verification mission, and called on the parties in Angola to observe the ceasefire and create all the conditions necessary for the completion of the peace process.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department of the procedure used by Argentina and Brazil in negotiating and signing agreements with the International Atomic Energy Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

We welcome the safeguards agreement between the IAEA, Argentina, Brazil and the Brazilian—Argentine agency for accounting and control of nuclear materials. It has no particular implications for my Department.

Japan

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 3 November, Official Report, column 171, on Japan, what discussions he has had with his Japanese counterparts relating to (a) the funding of the International Atomic Energy Agency and (b) the reduction of International Atomic Energy Agency inspections in Japan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

I have not discussed the funding of the International Atomic Energy Agency with the Japanese. The second subject is a matter for the IAEA and the Japanese Government.

Zangger Committee

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 3 November, Official Report, column 170, on the Zangger committee, what recent work has been produced by the Zangger committee; when it is next due to meet; whether it has discussed the establishment of a reporting system on the export and import of nuclear material and relevant equipment and certain non-nuclear material; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

Discussions in the Zangger committee are confidential to the parties involved. The next meeting is scheduled to take place in May 1993.

In an effort to strengthen the international safeguards system, the United Kingdom, along with European Community partners, has recently notified the International Atomic Energy Agency that EC member states intend to provide information on transfers of ore concentrates imported or exported from the European Community and information on the items listed in annex B to IAEA INFCIRC/254/Revl/Part 1, when a licence for whose export to a country outside the European Community has been approved. These new arrangements are expected to commence in the new year.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Chancellor's Legal Expenses

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps were taken by the Treasury to satisfy themselves as to the propriety of the amount which they paid to Carter-Ruck solicitors; how the proportion to be paid by the Treasury was arrived at; what assessment was made as to whether this was the most economical way of doing the work; and whether a remuneration certificate was requested from the Law Society as to the reasonableness of the charges carried and paid for by the Treasury.

Mr. Nelson: The decision that the Treasury should meet that part of the Chancellor's legal costs which related to the release of a press statement on the evening of 13 April 1991 and to the subsequent handling of extensive press inquiries was taken by the then accounting officer. He was satisfied that the actions taken by the Chancellor and his solicitors were justified in order to retain full confidence in the office of the Chancellor of the Exchequer and its holder and to forestall or correct misleading and inaccurate press stories which would have been damaging to the Chancellor's reputation and would therefore have had a bearing on his performance of his public duties. The Treasury did not meet any of the costs incurred in evicting the Chancellor's tenant.

Given the extensive interest generated by the press story and the high volume of inquiries which followed, the bill presented by Peter Carter-Ruck and Partners did not appear to the accounting officer to be either disproportionate or unjustified. No approach was made to the Law Society.

VAT

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make it his policy that the agreement reached at the Council of Finance Ministers on 27 July does not in any way jeopardise the right of the United Kingdom Government to maintain a zero rate of value-added tax on children's clothes and shoes;

(2) if he will make it his policy that the current zero rate of value-added tax on children's shoes and clothes will remain a derogation which is not time-limited;

(3) if he will make it his policy to ensure that the current right to maintain a zero rate of value-added tax on children's clothes and shoes remains in force indefinitely; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: The United Kingdom's current zero rates, including those on children's clothes and shoes, are protected by the EC sixth VAT directive which can only be amended by the unanimous agreement of all member states. The Government remain committed to the retention of the right to maintain existing zero rates.

Earth Summit

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the contribution the Central Statistical Office is making towards achieving the aim of the Earth summit relating to integration of environmental factors and costs into the national accounts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: In June this year, the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development proposed that member states should establish integrated economic and environmental accounts, in parallel to existing national accounts, at the earliest possible date. The Central Statistical Office published an article examining the theory behind such integration, with illustrative statistics, in the November 1992 issue of "Economic Trends". Developing such integrated accounts will be a difficult task, not least because of the difficulty of putting monetary values on environmental factors.

Housing (Capital Receipts)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to allow local authorities to use all their capital receipts for the provision of affordable housing.

Mr. Portillo: No. It is important that local authorities in England and Wales use accumulated receipts to repay debt. They may, however, spend virtually all the capital receipts they acquire between 13 November 1992 and 31 December 1993 on new capital investments. This is in addition to spending financed by any usable receipts local authorities acquired before 13 November. Local authorities in Scotland are free to use capital receipts within the overall arrangements for the control of local authority capital spending in Scotland.

Public Sector Deficit

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures showing the extent to which the public sector deficit was either overfunded or underfunded over the period since 1975.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 30 November 1992]: The extent to which the public sector deficit was overfunded or underfunded in each year over the period since 1975 is shown in the table:

In-year over(+)/under(−) funding

Financial year	£ billion
1975-76	−4·1
1976-77	−0·1
1977-78	−3·1
1978-79	−0·1
1979-80	−1·1
1980-81	−1·3
1981-82	+3·6
1982-83	+1·8
1983-84	+4·3
1984-85	+4·7
1985-86	−0·3
1986-87	−0·4
1987-88	0·0
1988-89	+2·7
1989-90	−0·7
1990-91	+0·3
1991-92	+0·3

Notes:

1. From 1988-89, the funding sector consists of the overseas sector and the domestic private sector excluding banks and building societies. In earlier years, the building societies were also included in the funding sector.
2. Figures take account of purchases of Treasury Bills by funding sector up to and including 1988-89. In subsequent years, Treasury Bills no longer count as funding.
3. No data is available for the funding sector's holding of tax instruments prior to 1976-77. However, the holdings were probably not material.

4. National Savings Bank Investment Account became part of National Savings on 31 December 1980, and moved from private sector to public sector.
5. The Trustee Savings Bank became part of the non-funding sector as from 31 December 1981, when the "banking sector" became the "monetary sector".
6. Public Sector Borrowing Rate was redefined in March 1984 to treat public sector bank deposits as a financing item rather than as one of the determinants of the PSBR, but the effect is minimal.

PRIME MINISTER

Cold Weather Credits

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Prime Minister when he will be replying to the letter of 21 October from the Campaign for Cold Weather Credits.

The Prime Minister: A reply was sent on my behalf by the Department of Social Security on 2 December 1992.

World Summit for Children

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will make a statement on the progress made towards the goals established at the World summit for children in 1990.

The Prime Minister: The Government published a "Report on United Kingdom Implementation of the Goals agreed by the World Summit for Children" as a Command Paper on 24 June 1992.

ENVIRONMENT

Tenants Charter

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to make the council tenants charter available to ethnic minorities.

Mr. Baldry: The council tenants charter has been available in five ethnic languages since 24 November. They are Bengali, Greek, Hindi, Urdu and Vietnamese. Copies of the new translations are being sent to all local authorities in England, community groups, advice organisations and individual tenants who used the reply slip on the English language introductory leaflet to obtain an ethnic language version. For those who understand only spoken English, the council tenants charter is also available on audio-cassette.

Waste Management

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to safeguard the future of the Waste Management Industry Training and Advisory Board in the event that regulations detailing the introduction of certificates of technical competence in respect of waste management are not laid before 15 December.

Mr. Maclean: The Waste Management Industry Training and Advisory Board is an independent body whose future the Government do not control. My Department's involvement with the board is that of a client. The board was commissioned by the Department to prepare a system of certificates of technical competence for the waste industry. That work is largely complete and the Government have proposed to prescribe those certificates as evidence of technical competence for the purposes of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Final regulations will be laid before Parliament as soon as possible, with a view to bringing the system into force on 1 April 1993. The board has represented to Government the importance of early issue of the final regulations if the technical competence system is to be introduced on that date. My officials keep in close contact with the board about the timetable for implementation. Transitional arrangements will be included in the regulations to ensure the orderly introduction of the assessment of technical competence.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the draft waste management guidance note No. 26A on the surrender of licences for landfill sites; and what assessment he has made of the effect of the time taken to publish this draft guidance on the target date for implementing the new licensing scheme.

Mr. Maclean: Draft guidance on the surrender of site licences will be published as soon as possible. The target date for the implementation of waste management licensing remains 1 April 1993.

Housing Associations (Empty Properties)

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many properties owned by housing associations were empty at the latest convenient date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The latest available statistics, for 31 March 1992, show that there were 16,200 empty housing association owned properties in England.

Housing associations in England have been seeking to maximise the occupation of their stock, and have reduced the proportion of empty properties from 4·2 per cent. in 1989 to 2·5 per cent. in 1992.

Flue Gas Desulphurisation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the effect on the United Kingdom's commitment to meet the targets of the 1988 large combustion plant directive of the refusal by PowerGen to retrofit flue gas desulphurisation—FGD—technology to 4,000 MW of capacity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Planning consent has been granted for PowerGen to retrofit 2,000 MW of capacity at Ratcliffe and work is well underway. PowerGen's application for consent to retrofit another 2,000 MW of capacity, at Ferrybridge, is still being considered by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

The United Kingdom intends to meet the reductions required by the large combustion plants directive by a range of measures, including the retrofitting of FGD, the use of alternative fuels and the construction of new, cleaner plant. My right hon. and learned Friend has the power to direct Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to require the fitting of FGD in a particular case if he considers it appropriate.

Rough Sleeping

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the schemes and initiatives that have received or are currently receiving Government funding under the rough sleeping initiative.

Mr. Baldry: I have today placed in the Library a list of all the voluntary organisations and housing associations funded under the Government's rough sleepers initiative in central London, showing the schemes they have provided or are currently providing.

Household Heating

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the number of households with solid fuel heating where the residents are too infirm to heat their homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Figures for the number of households with residents too infirm to heat their homes are not available. However, the 1986 English house condition survey estimated that solid fuel was the main heating fuel for 730,000 pensioner households, of which nearly a third were headed by residents aged 75 years and over.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue specific guidance for waste holders and waste regulation authorities relating to the status of ozone-depleting substances as controlled waste under section 33 (1)(c) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Yes. Guidance on the circumstances in which ozone-depleting substances may become controlled wastes for the purposes of part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, will be included in the circular to be issued by my Department before the whole of section 33 is brought into force, which is intended to be on 1 April 1993.

Thorne and Hatfield Moors

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the timetable for English Nature to take possession of the freehold of Thorne and Hatfield moors site of special scientific interest.

Mr. Maclean: English Nature has been managing the vegetated areas since February this year, with assistance from Fisons. The transfer of ownership will be completed as soon as possible.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what effect he expects the sale of Fisons horticultural division to have on the negotiation of an agreement between the company and English Nature on the purchase of Thorne and Hatfield moors.

Mr. Maclean: None.

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment English Nature has made of the extent to which damage to Thorne and Hatfield moors site of special scientific interest as a result of peat extraction has been reduced during negotiations for the purchase of the site.

Mr. Maclean: I am advised by English Nature that the vegetated areas previously planned for peat extraction are still intact and will remain so. Water levels on the moors have been successfully raised and the prime area of the site is now in better condition than before the negotiations.

Derelict Land Grant

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much derelict land grant has been made available for each local authority area in the last two financial years; and what level is expected to be paid for the current financial year.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table shows derelict land grant expenditure—grants and supplementary credits—incurred by local authorities over the last two years and the forecast for the current year.

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what grounds he will allow derelict land grant reclamation contracts to be awarded to contractors on a negotiated basis.

Mr. Robin Squire: Normally reclamation works supported by derelict land grant must be subject to competitive tendering. However, a negotiated contract may be accepted where site constraints make it reasonable to employ a contractor reclaiming adjacent land; or where the future occupant of the site wishes to reclaim the land himself. In either case the Department must be satisfied that the estimated costs represent value for money.

Empty Government Properties

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress the Government have made on establishing a task force on empty Government residential properties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I am pleased to announce the establishment of the task force on Government Departments' empty houses. Its first meeting will be on Wednesday 9 December. The task force has been established to help bring empty Government residential properties back into use, essentially to be sold, or let on short-term leases to people in housing need. The role of the task force will be to oversee Departments' achievements of their respective targets for disposals.

Mr. John Baker, chief executive of National Power, has been appointed as its chairman. The task force will also comprise an independent deputy chairman, Mr. Anthony Fletcher, two independent experts, Major-General Patrick Stone and Mr. David Yorke, and representatives from Government Departments with an interest in disposal of empty residential property.

The task force will be overseen by a ministerial steering group under the chairmanship of my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning. The ministerial steering group will monitor progress and give added impetus to the task force's work.

Methyl Bromide

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the United States of America's proposal at the Montreal protocol to phase out by 2000 the use of methyl bromide; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 3 December 1992]: In the recent Montreal protocol negotiations the United States of America proposed that the production and supply of methyl bromide be phased out by the year 2000. Methyl bromide is a wide spectrum biocide used in soil fumigation and in vital quarantine applications. The United Kingdom proposed to its EC partners that its production and consumption should be frozen at 1991 levels by 1995, and cut by 25 per cent. by the year 2000. In the event, only a freeze proved acceptable to all member states. We will continue to press for a reduction in the forthcoming discussions on a new EC regulation.

Earth Summit

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those nations known by Her Majesty's Government to have ratified agreements made at the Earth summit, stating for each which agreements have been ratified; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 4 December 1992]: The Seychelles, Mauritius and China have ratified both the framework convention on climate change and the convention on biological diversity. The USA, the Marshall Islands, Zimbabwe, the Maldives and Monaco have ratified the climate change convention.

Council House Sales

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number and value of council house sales by region in each year since 1989 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1989 prices.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 30 November 1992]: The information requested is given in the table. The figures exclude dwellings transferred to housing associations and other registered bodies in large-scale voluntary transfers. Such transfers accounted for some 71,000 dwellings valued at about £600 million in the period January 1989 to December 1991.

Non-Domestic Rates

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the distributable amount of non-domestic rates for 1993-94 and if he will explain the basis of his calculations.

Mr. Redwood [pursuant to his reply, 26 November 1992, c. 836]: My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 12 November that the non-domestic rate multiplier for 1993-94 will rise by 3·5 per cent. from its 1992-93 level to 0·416. The distributable amount of non-domestic rates based on this poundage will be £11,599 million. This includes an Exchequer payment of £922 million into the non-domestic rates pool to compensate local authorities for the shortfall in 1992-93 and 1993-94 which would otherwise occur as a result of the Non-Domestic Rating Act 1992. The basis of the calculation is set out in the table.

Notes:

1. Item 1(a): the estimated rateable value total represents the values of non-domestic hereditaments on local rating lists.

2. Item 1(b): the adjustment includes the estimated amount of rates that will not be recouped locally due to the revised transitional arrangements under the provisions of the 1992 Act.

3. Item 1(e): discretionary relief granted to charities, non-profit making organisations and for other reasons.

4. Item 1(g): net adjustments in respect of appeals and other amendments to the rating list affecting liability for previous years' rates settled in 1993-94.

5. Item 2: the rateable value of non-domestic hereditaments on the central rating list after adjustments for appeals.

6. Item 4(a): a preliminary estimate of the reduction in the amount which the City of London will not be required to pay into the non-domestic rating pool on account of the local rate in the City. It is the amount which will be retained by the authority to meet its expenditure.

7. Item 4(b): the allowance for the costs incurred by local authorities in collecting the non-domestic rates from ratepayers.

8. Item 5(a): adjustments based on estimated mandatory reliefs for empty property in 1992-93 and earlier years not taken into account in the calculation of the Distributable Amount for 1992-93.

9. Item 6(a) and (b): the contribution from central government to offset the amount of the Secretary of State's estimate of income foregone arising from the provisions of the Non-Domestic Rating Act 1992.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Fraud

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action is being undertaken to deal with social security fraud in England.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government are determined to crack down on fraud and abuse of the benefits system. All staff are encouraged to be aware of possible fraudulent claims to benefit and of the need to safeguard public funds. Allegations of attempted fraud which appear to be well founded are investigated, and further action, including possible legal proceedings, is taken as considered appropriate.

We are building on the excellent performance of recent years when savings made by fraud investigators in the Benefits Agency throughout Great Britain have risen strongly. In 1990-91 they saved £341 million, last year the figure rose to £427 million, and in 1992-93 the final savings are expected to top £500 million.

In his statement to the House on 12 November, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced that a further £10 million would be invested to help step up the fight. He also announced plans to encourage local authorities to prevent housing benefit and council tax benefit fraud. The combined efforts of the Benefits Agency and the local authorities are expected to save nearly £1 billion in each of the next three financial years.

Order Books

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of social security order books reported lost were subsequently cashed in the latest period for which figures are available.

Miss Widdecombe: The payment of benefits by order book is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. David Willets, dated 7 December 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what proportion of social security order books reported lost were subsequently cashed in the latest period for which figures are available.

In the quarter ending 30 June 1992, just over 62,000 Social Security order books were recorded as lost, stolen or destroyed, which represents approximately half of one per cent. of all order books issued. Information on the number of those order books which are subsequently cashed is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Mr. Robin Archer of 51 Ranscombe road, Brixham, will know the status of his application for disability living allowance submitted in March; and what is the reason for the time taken in reaching a decision.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 7 December 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning the Disability Living Allowance (DLA) claim by your constituent Mr. Robin Archer of 51 Ranscombe Road, Brixham.

I should explain that action on Mr. Archer's claim was completed in August 1992 and notification sent to him. A duplicate notification was sent to him on 1 December 1992.

I offer my apologies to Mr. Archer for the delay in handling his claim. I have written to you separately, and in greater detail, about the case. You will be aware from my letter of 19 October 1992 to all MPs of the problems we have encountered since the successful launch of the new benefits and the positive steps taken to improve the situation.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mortgage Interest Allowance

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he intends to review the transaction charge payable by mortgage lenders as a contribution to the costs incurred by the Benefits Agency in providing direct payment to lenders of the mortgage interest allowance in income support.

Mr. Burt: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State has today laid amendment regulations which will reduce the transaction charge levied under the mortgage interest direct payment scheme from £2·50 to £1 for each payment. The change takes effect from 1 April 1993. This reduction reflects the reduced costs of running the scheme, particularly the absence of the setting-up costs incurred in 1992-93, the first year of operation.

The scheme will continue to provide protection against repossession to many people in receipt of benefit.

Invalidity Benefit

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his estimate of the costs of the research study into invalidity benefit launched in August 1991; who has been appointed to conduct the study; and on what criteria the research is based;

(2) on what date he expects completion of the research study into invalidity benefit which commenced in August 1991; and when he intends to publish the results already received.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the right hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) on 19 October at column 171 and the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 27 October at column 632.

Pensions

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce legislation to provide that persons who have opted out of employers' pension schemes should be entitled to receive financial compensation in lieu of pension enhancements offered to fellow employees to have not opted out, as part of a redundancy package.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

I have no plans to do so.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Coal Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the coalfields producing coal in 1962; and if he will list for each year since 1962 and the current year to date, for each area, the number of mines, the tonnage of coal produced and the number of miners together with (a) the number of mines closed, (b) the number of miners who lost their jobs, (c) the number made compulsorily redundant and (d) the percentage level of unemployment among adult male workers for the relevant employment districts.

Mr. Eggar: British Coal has reorganised its group structure several times since 1962. The tables show the number of operating collieries, the tonnage of saleable output of coal, and the number of men on colliery books for each year since 1962 for British Coal's current operating groups.

There have been no compulsory redundancies since 1962. Information on unemployment rates is available from the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library. I regret that the other information requested cannot readily be provided.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what the cost and expenses were for the work which his Department commissioned into the future of the coal industry by Rothschilds and by Boyds.

Mr. Eggar: Fees paid to Government advisers are commercially confidential. Total expenditure on coal privatisation is reported to Parliament in the usual way through the publication of departmental estimates and the annual appropriation accounts.

Mr. Conway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about progress in the coal review.

Mr. Heseltine: I sent the Chairman of the Trade and Industry Select Committee a progress report on 7 December listing the main areas and options for consideration identified by evidence submitted to the coal review. Copies of the progress report have been placed in the Library.

Exports and Imports (Information)

Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he has given to the voluntary provision by the United Kingdom of information on the export and import of (a) nuclear material, (b) relevant equipment and (c) certain non-nuclear material to the International Atomic Energy Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Discussions in the Zangger committee are confidential to the parties involved. The next meeting is scheduled to take place in May 1993.

In an effort to strengthen the international safeguards system, the United Kingdom, along with European Community partners, has recently notified the International Atomic Energy Agency that EC member states intend to provide information on transfers of ore concentrates imported or exported from the European Community and information on the items listed in annex B to IAEA INFCIRC/254/Revl/Part 1, when a licence for whose export to a country outside the European Community has been approved. These new arrangements are expected to commence in the new year.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether there is an agreed amount of notice given to the state that is to be inspected when the International Atomic Energy Agency undertakes special inspections; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: There is no fixed period of notice for special inspections in the relevant safeguards agreements; these provide for prior consultation between the state and the IAEA in circumstances which may lead to a special inspection. In case action by the state is essential and urgent the IAEA board of governors may call upon the state to take the required action without delay.

Marine Protection

Mr. Richards: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures are being taken to ensure that test drillings for oil and gas will not damage marine life off the north Wales coast.

Mr. Eggar: As described in my answer to the hon. Member for Cardiff, Central (Mr. Jones) on 7 December, Official Report, col 497, licences for oil and gas exploration drilling may be subject to special conditions designed to take account of the sensitivities of specific licensed blocks. In the block off the north Wales coast where drilling is currently in progress, environmental and local seabed surveys were carried out before drilling started. Water-based muds are being used, and cuttings may be discharged to the sea since tidal conditions in the area ensure their rapid dispersal. No other rig discharges are permitted, nor any fuel transfers while the rig is on site.

Export Credit Guarantees

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much has been expended in export credit guarantees in each of the last 10 years; and how much has been paid out in each of those years as a result of non-payment for exports.

Mr. Needham: Details of the volume of export credit business guaranteed over the previous 10 years, along with the related expenditure on interest rate support and the amount paid out under such guarantees by way of claims, are published each year in the annual report of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Copies of the annual report are placed in the Library.

East Sussex

Mr. Bowden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the problems and needs of (a) Brighton and Hove and (b) the county of East Sussex while conducting the review of the assisted areas map.

Mr. Salisbury: We are currently considering points made by two deputations from the areas mentioned—one from Hastings and one from Brighton and Hove. We are also considering the written submissions that have been received from these and other areas.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what current studies are being undertaken by the Harwell research laboratories into the risks of inhalation and ingestion of alpha radiation emitted from plutonium.

Mr. Eggar: My Department and the Department of Health contribute towards a range of research projects involving the inhalation and ingestion of various radionuclides. Details of these research studies are contained in AEA Technology's radiological protection research 1992 annual report. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if, pursuant to his answer of 22 October, Official Report, columns 362-63, he will make a further statement on the outcome of the analysis of the radioactive source.

Mr. Eggar: The sealed radioactive source contained an extremely small quantity—a few thousandths of a gram—of plutonium.

Export Companies (Wales)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how he proposes to assist Wales-based exporter companies.

Mr. Needham: All the excellent services to exporters provided by my Department, jointly with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, are available to exporters in Wales through the Welsh Office in Cardiff.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what account was taken of articles 90 and 92 of the treaty of Rome in drawing up the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Mr. Eggar: The non-fossil fuel obligation was notified at the appropriate time to the European Commission for the necessary clearances.

Motor Cycles

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the export earnings of sales of motor cycles over 100 bhp for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Needham: Details of the export earnings of sales of motor cycles by brake horsepower are not available.

Nuclear Review

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to bring forward the 1994 nuclear review.

Mr. Eggar: It remains the Government's policy that the future prospects for nuclear power in the United Kingdom will be reviewed in 1994. However, the coal review currently being undertaken by my Department is looking at the implications of the non-fossil fuel obligation to purchase power from non-fossil sources including that from nuclear sources. It would be premature to decide detailed terms of reference for the 1994 review before the results of the coal review are known.

Energy Council

Mr. Conway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on issues discussed and decisions taken at the meeting of the European Community's Council of Energy Ministers on 30 November.

Ms. Quin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions on differing levels of coal subsidy in the EC took place at the EC Energy Council on 30 November; what other matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: The meeting was held under the United Kingdom presidency with my hon. Friend, the Member for Enfield, North (Mr. Eggar) in the chair.

Progress was made on the technical details of the draft directive for the harmonisaion of hydrocarbon licensing regimes, which the United Kingdom also supports. The Council agreed that the draft directive should go forward for decision under Denmark's presidency.

Political agreement was reached on the proposed directive on oil crisis measures. The related issue of the negotiating mandate for Community accession to the International Atomic Energy Agency was also discussed and remitted for further discussion by officials.

The Council considered the progress which was being made in the negotiations for a European energy charter, reaffirmed the importance which it attached to that process, and invited the charter conference to set a deadline for concluding negotiations on the basic agreement intended to put the political commitments of the charter into legally obligatory form.

The Council reached political agreement on the Commission's proposed programme for the promotion of renewable energies—ALTENER. ALTENER is one of four measures in the Commission's proposed CO_2 stabilization package. The Council discussed progress on the other three measures. In relation to the SAVE directive, it was agreed that officials should continue with their discussions.

The Council had a useful discussion on the European coal industry during which the Commission introduced its proposals for a new coal state aids regime to replace the existing one which expires at the end of 1993.

One of the main agenda items was the Commission's proposal for directives on the liberalisation of the electricity and gas markets. While the United Kingdom supports these measures, other member states continue to have concerns about them. The Council invited the Commission to consider modifying its proposals in the light of member states' comments and the opinion of the European Parliament.

European Economic Area

Mr. Conway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, what effect the Swiss referendum result will have on implementation of the European economic area.

Mr. Heseltine: The Swiss people voted on membership of the European economic area on 6 December. A majority of both the populace and of the cantons was required to enable Switzerland to ratify the EEA agreement. The results announced on 6 December were as follows: 50·3 per cent. of the populace voted against ratification, 49·7 per cent. in favour. Sixteen of the cantons voted against, with seven in favour. The proportion of the electorate that voted was 78·3 per cent.

The Government regret the Swiss decision not to join the EEA. The Foreign Affairs Council on 7 December took note of the result of the Swiss referendum. It also noted that the agreement provides arrangements to consider the situation in the event that a signatory of the agreement fails to ratify. It commented that, without Switzerland, the agreement will require modifications, which will have to be satisfactorily agreed. It expressed the hope that the agreement should be rapidly pursued. It therefore invited the Commission to have early contacts with the EFTA countries on the timing of the next steps, and to report back to the Council on 21 December.

It is the clear hope of the Community that the agreement should go ahead. It is too early to determine precisely when the agreement may now come into force. If the agreement is to be amended, a diplomatic conference will agree the necessary changes. The Government believe that every effort should be made to ensure that the agreement can be implemented as soon as possible, and we shall, in the remaining weeks of our presidency be working towards this objective.

The European Economic Area Bill was introduced in this House on 25 November, having passed through all its stages in another place. The Government will announce in due course how it proposes to proceed with the Bill when the impact of the Swiss vote on the Community and EFTA has been fully assessed.

Department of Energy Staff

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many former Department of Energy personnel (a) have been placed on paid leave and (b) are currently on paid leave as a consequence of the incorporation of the former Department of Energy into his Department; what was the duration of paid leave which has been incurred in each case; and what is the total cost of the paid leave.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 18 November 1992]: Three members of staff from the former Department of Energy were temporarily placed on paid leave as a consequence of the merger of the Department with DTI. One remains on leave pending retirement in January. As at 30 November the duration of the paid leave was 30 working days at a total cost of £6,149·15.

Energy Supplies

Mr. Churchill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the cost to the balance of payments over each of the past five years for which figures are available in respect of imported energy supplies of (a) oil, (b) gas, (c) coal, (d) electricity via the channel connector and (e) overall.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 4 December 1992]: Figures on a balance of payments basis are not available in the detail requested.

Data in the "Overseas Trade Statistics" value imports on a "cif" basis, that is, including the cost of freight and insurance to a United Kingdom port, and exports on an "fob" basis, that is, free on board at a United Kingdom port. A comparison on these bases gives the following levels of net exports:

£ million

	Oil[1]	Gas	Coal[2]	Electricity	Total
1987	4,073	−878	−281	−242	2,673

Deep-mining Equipment

Mr. Churchill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the net balance of trade in deep-mining equipment in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 4 December 1992]: The standard international trade classification, which governs the recording of trade data, does not provide for differentiation between machinery for deep mining and that for other types of coal mining, rock cutting or tunnelling. However, based on the various categories within the classification relating to this type of equipment, of which a major part will have been for coal mining, the trade surpluses in the last four years were as follows:

	£ million
1988	24·5
1989	38·5
1990	34·2
1991	47·2

Source: Overseas Trade Statistics.

It is not possible to provide compatible data for 1987, as the classification in operation at that time was less detailed than the current one.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Michael: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer of 2 December, Official Report, column 253, what is the specific number of jobs that he intends to cut in the Export Credits Guarantee Department in Cardiff.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 7 December 1992]: Following the privatisation of ECGD's insurance services business the number of posts remaining in Cardiff was projected in the 1992 public expenditure survey to fall from 196 to 165 over three years. The recent review of the distribution of BCOD's functions will lead to a further net reduction of 10 posts over that period. Efficiency improvements are likely to lead to further reductions in both London and Cardiff, but these have yet to be determined and will depend on the level of business.

Brazilian Mahogany

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much Brazilian mahogany, by volume and by value, was imported into Britain in 1991.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 7 December 1992]: The only information that relates to mahogany imported from Brazil is that which has been sawn or chipped lengthwise, sliced or peeled, of a thickness exceeding 6mm, defined as code 440723901 of the standard international trade classification, revision 3. Under this heading there were 45,762 cu m of mahogany, valued at £22 million, imported into the United Kingdom from Brazil in 1991.

Single Market

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide a breakdown of the cost of each of the five editions of "The single market: A Guide to Public Purchasing"; how many copies were produced for each edition; and what guidance on public purchasing has been produced by every other EC member state in accordance with community guidelines.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 7 December 1992]: The costs of the five editions of DTI's 'The Single Market: Guide to Public Purchasing' are as follows:

	£	Copies
1st edition, September 1989	20,850	25,000
2nd edition, June 1990	25,520	23,000
3rd edition, February 1991	13,740	15,000

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The experiments to determine the effectiveness of painting speed limit roundels on the road surface, as a way of influencing driver choice of speed, are not yet complete. If they are shown to improve road safety, we will authorise local highway authorities to instal them where appropriate.

Nuclear Material (Transport)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department will obtain a copy of the report prepared by the Japanese Government's Central Research Institute of Electric Power Industries on the sea transport of plutonium.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what account he has taken of the vote in the European Parliament in Strasbourg in November based on documents B3-0868/92, 0-163/92 and B3-0869/92, 0-164/92 on the international transport of plutonium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 7 December 1992]: The international transport of plutonium by all modes is governed by the regulations of the International Atomic Energy Agency, which are kept under continuous review.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what kinds of vessels or other kinds of transport are used for the maritime transport of irradiated nuclear fuel, plutonium and high-level radioactive waste to and from, or by, the United Kingdom; and what monitoring his Department carries out of the transport patterns for the movement of such materials.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 7 December 1992]: Ships complying fully with international convention standards for safety and pollution prevention are used for the transport of irradiated nuclear fuel. No plutonium or high-level radioactive wastes have been transported to or from the United Kingdom except for small quantities of plutonium used for life-support systems such as energy sources for heart pacemakers. Transport patterns are not monitored by the Department.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the full text of the governmental studies of analyses of the transport of irradiated nuclear fuel, plutonium or high-level radioactive waste produced since December 1991.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the submissions made by the United Kingdom to the joint International Atomic Energy Agency—International Maritime Organisation—United Nations Environment Programme working group have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 7 December 1992]: There were no United Kingdom Government submissions.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the standard operations of maritime transport carrying irradiated nuclear fuel, plutonium or high-level radioactive waste to and from, or by, the United Kingdom; and what accident rate for such operations has been recorded in each year since 1982.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 7 December 1992]: Of the United Kingdom-registered ships known to carry such cargo there was one incident recorded in 1991 which directly concerned handling operations and which falls within the scope of the Merchant Shipping (Accident Investigation) Regulations 1989. Records of incidents prior to the establishment of the marine accident investigation branch in July 1989 are not fully comprehensive. However, there are no known cases of serious incidents involving such cargo and operations between 1982 and mid-1989.

Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced total public expenditure planning figures for the Northern Ireland programme. I have now decided on the allocations to individual programmes as shown in the table. Copies of a more detailed statement have been placed in the Library. These allocations reflect my assessment of how best to distribute the Northern Ireland public expenditure totals in response to local needs and circumstances.

EC Funding

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been received by Northern Ireland under each of the European Community initiatives to date; and how much of the money received in each financial year up to 31 December 1991 from EC sources has been paid into the Northern Ireland Consolidated Fund.

Mr. Mates: Under the current structural funds allocation, Northern Ireland has nine approved Community initiatives. Of these initiatives, four were not approved until December 1991 and three until February 1992. The amounts received in Northern Ireland up to 31 December 1991 under the two remaining initiatives, Interreg and Envireg, were £4·67 million and £1·51 million respectively. The total forecast amounts received under each initiative up to 31 December 1992 are:

Initiative	Forecast receipts to 31 December 1992 £ million
Interreg (assistance to border areas)	13·10
Stride (research and technological development)	3·75
Envireg (environmental improvement)	1·94
Prisma (assistance to firms)	0·80
Telematique (promotion of telecommunications service)	1·65
Euroform (qualifications for women)	0·32
NOW (employment opportunities for women)	0·35
Horizon (handicapped and certain disadvantaged groups)	0·18
Leader (rural development)	0·26

All money received from EC sources is paid into the Northern Ireland Consolidated Fund.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much of the receipts which Northern Ireland has received from the European regional development fund since 1973 has been earned by (a) infrastructure projects undertaken by non-central government bodies, (b) infrastructure projects undertaken by central Government and (c) industrial projects.

Mr. Mates: The following amounts have been received from the European regional development fund to 31 December 1991:

Infrastructure	£ million
Non-central Government	120·5
Central Government	78·3
Industry	91·8
Programmes[1]	97·3
Total[2]	387·9

[1] These programmes combine elements of both industry and infrastructure.
[2] Includes estimated receipts for the first nine months of the 1991-92 financial year.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much of the receipts which Northern Ireland has received from the European regional development fund since 1973 has been earned by (a) the private sector, (b) non-central government public sector bodies and (c) central Government.

Mr. Mates: The following amounts have been received from the European regional development fund to 31 December 1991:

	£ million
Private Sector	30·9
Non-central Government Public Sector Bodies	174·6
Central Government	182·4
TOTAL	387·9

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much was Northern Ireland's share of the United Kingdom's payments into the European Economic Community from 1 January 1973 to 31 December 1991; how much was Northern Ireland's share of the receipts for the same period; and how much of those receipts was used to offset Government expenditure on Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mates: It is not possible to determine Northern Ireland's actual share of the United Kingdom's contribution to the European Community because payments are made on a national and not a regional basis. Similarly it is not possible to identify the full extent of receipts from the Community. However, a Northern Ireland attributed share of the contribution to the EC is calculated as an accounting mechanism necessary because of the operation of a separate Northern Ireland Consolidated Fund. This notional attributed share does not count as an item of expenditure within the Northern Ireland public expenditure programme and has therefore no bearing on the level of public expenditure in the Province.

Figures for the notional attribution of part of Northern Ireland's share of the United Kingdom's payments and for those areas where the receipts from the European Community's structural funds can be separately identified are as follows:

Financial Year	Attributed Share (part)	Identified Receipts[2]
1973-74	1	0
1974-75	6	4
1975-76	8	4
1976-77	13	16

[2] This comprises total identified EC structural funds receipts in Northern Ireland.

All receipts represent cash additions to the recipients and are subject to normal European Community audit arrangements.

The overall level of receipts is taken into account in the Government's decisions on public expenditure allocations and their availability enables public expenditure to be maintained at a higher level than would otherwise be feasible.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money Northern Ireland has received in each financial year up to 31 December 1991 from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund, guidance section; how much of those receipts were paid to the private sector and how much to the public sector; how much of these receipts represented a cash addition to the Northern Ireland economy; and how much was used each year to offset Government expenditure on Northern Ireland.

New Opportunities for Women

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State of Northern Ireland what moneys have been deployed by way of the European Community's new opportunities for women initiative under article 11 of Council Regulation (EEC) No. 4253/88 in (a) 1991 and (b) so far this year; what kind of employment and training programmes were funded in this way; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. Crozier. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 7 December 1992:

You asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what monies have been deployed by way of the European Community's NOW initiative under Article 11 of Council Regulation (EEC) No. 4253/88 in:

(a) 1991; and

(b) so far this year;

what kind of employment and training programmes were funded in this way; and if he will make a statement.

The Training and Employment Agency (T&EA) has responsibility for the administration of the NOW initiative in Northern Ireland. As Chief Executive of the T&EA, I have been asked by the Secretary of State to reply on his behalf.

To date no money has been paid to promoters of projects under the NOW initiative in Northern Ireland apart from preliminary technical assistance to help promoters establish links with their transnational partners and jointly develop their projects. Technical assistance amounting to £20,000 has been committed and £14,500 paid.

Letters offering assistance totalling £226,000 have issued; and the first tranche of payments, amounting to £43,000 should be made shortly. Further Letters of Offer in respect of assistance totalling some £600,000 are in the process of being prepared.

Projects for assistance under the NOW initiative have been put forward by a wide range of bodies including rural and inner-city women's groups, training organisations and institutions of further and higher education. These projects all seek to enhance the skill levels and employment prospects of women and include pre-vocational training, training in new technologies and training in relation to business creation.

In administering the NOW initiative in Northern Ireland, the T&EA has sought to enable as many groups as possible to benefit despite the relatively small amount of EC assistance available (our original allocation was some £700,000). This has involved encouraging promoters of similar projects to establish networks within Northern Ireland enabling them to share resources, expertise and transnational contacts.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of Clwyd schoolchildren of GCSE age have taken the exams; and what proportion of Clwyd students carry on from GCSE to A-level.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the proportion of pupils who carry on to A level from GCSE is not collected. In 1991-92, 93 per cent. of Clwyd schoolchildren aged 15 sat GCSE examinations. In 1991-92, 1,476 students were following A level courses in Clwyd (in year 12 at school, or at college aged 16). This represents 39 per cent. of pupils aged 15 who sat GCSE the previous year.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of students in Wales carry on from GCSE to A level.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the proportion of pupils who carry on from GCSE to A level is not collected. In 1991-92, 29,660 students were following A level courses in Wales (in year 12 at school, or at college aged 16). This represents 39 per cent. of pupils aged 15 who sat GCSE the previous year.

Drug Addiction (Pregnancy)

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children were born in Wales suffering from drug addiction in 1991-92 as a result of the mother's usage during pregnancy.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None in 1990-91, the latest year for which information is available.

Small Businesses

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to help small businesses in Wales develop closer ties with Europe.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A wide range of measures are available. Among the more significant are:

Overseas trade services

The Welsh Office is part of a United Kingdom-wide network established to encourage businesses to take advantage of opportunities abroad. Advice is given to businesses on both how to enter new export markets and provide overseas trade services. Assistance is available particularly for small and medium enterprises (SMEs) which are entering overseas markets for the first time.

The Welsh Office also promotes awareness of the availability of assistance for exporting at trade fairs and through sales missions to overseas markets. Over the last five years missions have visited Spain, Portugal, France, the Netherlands and Italy. Next year missions are planned to Germany, Switzerland and Belgium.

EC relay centre network

A Welsh centre is planned for January 1993 as part of a network being established throughout the European Community, to encourage SMEs to participate in and exploit the results of the Community's research and development programmes.

The development agencies

The Welsh Development Agency (WDA) participates in various initiatives designed to help Welsh companies seek new business opportunities in Europe. These initiatives include the Wales European centre, Eurolink, Europartenariat, Wales Euro Info centres and Fit for Europe reviews.

The Development Board for Rural Wales (DBRW) provides core funding for mid-Wales Export Association Ltd based at Welshpool. All of the board's export activities are channelled through this specialist organisation which in turn provides a full range of export advice and services to businesses in rural mid-Wales. In recent years the Export Association has given particular emphasis to the opportunities that might be presented to companies in mid-Wales through the advent of the single European market.

Links with the Four Motors

Links have been established between Wales and four of the most economically advanced regions of Europe—Baden-Wurttemberg, Lombardy, Catalonia and Rhone-Alpes, known together as the Four Motors. Through these links SMEs are offered various opportunities in these regions including technology transfer, joint ventures and for trade.

Local enterprise agencies

With the advent of the single European market several of Wales's enterprise agencies, including those which have received core-funding from the WDA, have developed a service for businesses wishing to obtain adsvice and counselling about Europe.

Urban programme

Urbane programme support has been made available for projects which encourage the development of links between Welsh businesses and Europe.

Inward Investment

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the inward investment projects in Wales since 1979 and the jobs created or safeguarded by each project.

Mr. David Hunt: Information is not available for projects recorded before 1 April 1983. Since that time over 1,000 projects have been recorded and a list of the companies concerned, other than those who have requested confidentiality, has been placed in the Library of the House. For reasons of commercial confidentiality, individual details of jobs are not disclosed.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales in 1991-92 died (a) as an indirect result and (b) as a direct result of drug abuse.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In the calendar year 1991, the latest year for which data is available, there were six deaths directly attributable to drug misuse in Wales.

Data on deaths as an indirect result of drug misuse are not collected centrally.

European Community Grants

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much Wales has received in European Community grants in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. David Hunt: The European regional development fund is the only one of the main stream structural funds for which expenditure can be identified on an annual basis. The total commitments to eligible Welsh bodies from the fund in each of the past 10 years are shown in the following table:

	£ million
1982	46·7
1983	48·9
1984	63·0
1985	54·9
1986	49·7
1987	57·8
1988	63·3
1989	38·8
1990	27·4
1991	89·0

The European social fund (ESF) element of objectives 2 and 5(b) of the structural funds was administered directly by the European Commission prior to 1990 and figures for Wales are not readily available. However commitment figures for subsequent years are as follows:

	£ million
1990	11·38
1991	11·96

Objectives 3 and 4 of the structural fund which are also supported by ESF monies are administered on a GB basis and figures for Wales are not separately identifiable.

Figures for FEOGA grant are not available on a comparable basis to the ERDF.

Welsh Museum School Service

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision will be made to fund the Welsh museum's school service centrally.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 5 November at col. 388.

Radiation

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the most recently recorded levels of radiation off the north coast of Wales; and by what amount they differ from background levels.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Details of the latest recorded levels of radiation off the north Wales coast can be found in the "Aquatic Environment Monitoring Report" (No. 29) 1990, published by the Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food. A copy of the report is available in the Library of the House.

The major radionuclide in the Irish sea is Caesium 137, and levels of this have decreased markedly in recent years. The extent of this decrease can be seen in figure 4.4 of the "Environmental Digest for Wales" No. 6 1991, copies of which are also kept in the Library of the House.

Adult Training

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what policy initiatives he is taking to enhance the retraining of unemployed men and women over the age of 21 years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment on 12 November 1992 at column 903.

Education White Paper

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the consultations on the White Paper, "Choice and Diversity and the Education Bill", supported the proposals and how many were opposed.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply of 13 November to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) at column 993.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to publish his proposals for the reform of local government in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I will announce my decisions as soon as possible.

Hearing Impairment

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what resources he has provided to each county council in Wales in each of the past five years (a) in respect of children statemented for hearing impairment as having special educational needs and (b) in respect of children with hearing impairment who have not been statemented.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is for local authorities to determine what resources should be directed to education services, including those for children with hearing impairments.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what salaries are being paid to chairmen and ordinary members of NHS trusts; how many hours per week members of the trusts are contractually required to work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Chairmen receive a remuneration of between £15,125 and £19,285 per annum dpending on the turnover of the trust. Members receive £5,000 per annum for an expected time commitment of at least the equivalent of two days per month.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list of the chairmen and members of the national health service trusts in Wales, together with their known political affiliations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The chairman of the NHS trusts in Wales are as follows:

Mr. Anthony J. G. Bowen, Pembrokeshire NHS Trust.
Mr. John H. Button, Swansea NHS Trust.
Mr. John Curtis, South and East Wales Ambulance NHS Trust.
Mr. Colin Hughes Davies, Glan Hafren NHS Trust.
Mr. Edmund Francis Lloyd Fitzhugh, Gofal Cymuned Clwydian Community Care NHS Trust.
Mr. E. Michael W. Griffith, Glan Clwyd District General Hospital NHS Trust.
Brigadier Ronald Edward Lewis Jenkins, Llanelli Dinefwr NHS Trust.
Mr. Derek W. C. Morgan, Bridgend and District NHS Trust.
Mrs. Fiona Natalie Peel, Gwent Community Health NHS Trust.
The Hon. Mrs. Rosalind (Lindy) Helen Penrose Price, Powys Health Care NHS Trust.
Mr. Aldham Roberts, Wrexham Maelor Hospital NHS Trust.
Mr. Brian Thompson, Carmarthen and District NHS Trust.
Sir Donald Walters, Llandough Hospital NHS Trust.
Mrs. Sally Williams, Ceredigion and Mid Wales NHS Trust.

The non-executive directors of the Pembrokeshire NHS Trust are as follows:

Mr. Richard A. Collins
Mr. David L. Hughes
Mr. Glyn T. Noakes
Mr. Thomas S. Smedley
Mrs. Margaret Thomas

Appointments are made irrespective of political affiliation and such information is not held centrally.

Training Providers

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether it is his policy that training and enterprise councils in Wales shall pass on to training providers the cash to pay allowances to trainees in advance of the relevant pay day or within seven days of those costs falling on the training providers.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) are responsible for the funding arrangements which they have with their providers. It is for these two parties to agree such arrangements.

Students (Accommodation)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will amend the regulations to enable housing associations to let accommodation to students more easily; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government have already taken steps to maintain and encourage turnover in student lettings through the Assured and Protected Tenancies (Lettings to Students) Regulations 1988, as amended, which added all registered housing associations to the list of bodies able to offer non-assured tenancies to students in Wales and England.

Land Liming

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to increase subsidies to encourage liming the land near rivers and streams in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no plans to extend grant aid for routine applications of lime. Farmers with improvement plans under the Farm and Conservation Grant Regulations can obtain grant assistance towards the cost of liming land where this is part of a programme of reseeding and regeneration. In the less favoured areas, lime treatment alone is eligible for grant where it can be demonstrated to be genuine restoration and not routine treatment.

Broadleaf Trees

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to increase subsidies to encourage the growing of broadleaf trees in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government have no plans to increase the subsidies which are already available to encourage the planting of broadleaved trees. Higher rates of grant are paid under the woodland grant scheme for the establishment and management of broadleaved woodlands, and these have been successful in encouraging an increased amount of broadleaved planting in Wales.

River Acidification

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to combat river acidification in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office is currently considering river acidification as part of its wider work and research on acid deposition in Wales.

Health Authorities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in which circumstances a senior officer of a health authority in Wales might fulfil both purchaser and provider roles at the same time.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 7 December at column 509.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether it is his policy that the purchaser and provider funding shall be clearly defined and separated within a health authority in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: District health authorities in Wales are funded to purchase health care for their resident populations. They are expected to plan and monitor this expenditure and at the same time take into account—both in their overall financial plans and their in-year financial management—the provider income and expenditure of their directly-managed units. The outturn income and expenditure of both the purchaser and provider functions are recorded in the health authority's annual accounts.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for every district health authority in Wales (a) the number of acute beds and (b) the total number of hospital beds at 31 March 1991.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The requested information is given in the table.

Staffed beds allocated as at 31 March 1991

	Acute[1]	Total
Clwyd	1,276	2,335
East Dyfed	680	1,568
Gwent	1,400	3,044

	Acute[1]	Total

West Glamorgan	1,310	2,377

[1] Excluding geriatrics, obstetrics, GP maternity and psychiatric specialties.

Examination Results

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) when he intends to collate and publish the examination results of (a) grant-maintained and (b) independent schools in Wales;

(2) when he will publish the examination results and league tables for schools in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: School performance data relating to examination achievements of secondary schools will be published very soon.

The data will include all LEA and grant-maintained schools and those independent schools which have agreed to participate.

Tourism

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the amount of revenue from tourism to Wales in 1980, 1990 and 1991; what proposals he has to facilitate increased tourism in 1992-93: and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts [pursuant to his answer, 11 November 1992, c. 820]: Unfortunately an incorrect figure was given, the correct answer is as follows:

Estimates of expenditure by overnight visitors to Wales are given in the following table. Since 1989, information on United Kingdom visitors to Wales has been obtained from the United Kingdom tourism survey. It is not possible to make a direct comparison between the results of this and earlier surveys. Information on overseas visitors is not available prior to 1981.

Estimates of expenditure by day visitors are available only for the financial year ending on 31 March 1989 when an estimated £229 million was spent in Wales.

Expenditure by overnight visitors to Wales[1]

£ million

Year	United Kingdom visitors	Overseas visitors
1980	[2]	[3]
1981	[2]	50
1990	900	130
1991	900	130

Sources: United Kingdom Travel Survey, International Passenger Survey.

[1] These estimates, derived from sample surveys and thus subject to potential random sampling errors, have been rounded to the nearest £5 million.
[2] Not available on a comparable basis.
[3] Not available prior to 1981.

In order further to promote tourism in Wales, the Government uplifted support for the Wales tourist board by 20 per cent. in 1992-93 to a record £13·529 million.

DEFENCE

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civil servants from his Department have been relocated from London to other parts of the United Kingdom (a) in the last five years and (b) in the last 10 years; and to where they were relocated.

Mr. Aitken: Over the last five years the MOD, under the Government's relocation initiative, has relocated 836 posts from London to other parts of the United Kingdom. Details are as follows:

Location	Posts
Bath	196
Yeovilton	54
Swindon	210
Sutton Coldfield	250
Cranwell	9
Harrogate	65
Llangennech	32
Andover	10
Portsmouth	10
TOTAL	836

In the preceding five years, 743 posts were moved from London to Glasgow under the central dispersal programme, with a final tranche of 23 posts moving to Glasgow in 1989.

The MOD is already a well-dispersed Department, with 60 per cent. of its civilian staff already based outside London and the south east. As a result of moves already planned and reductions in staff numbers, only about 30 per cent. of Ministry of Defence civilians will be left in London by the mid-1990s.

Weir Group plc

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 25 November to the hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. [illegible]), Official Report, column 700, if he will identify the principal equipment projects concerned in the payments of over £250 million to the Weir Group plc in the financial year 1990-91, as recorded in table 1.17 of "1992 Defence Statistics".

Mr. Aitken: Payments shown against the Weir Group in table 1.17 of the "1992 Defence Statistics" include those to Devonport Management Ltd. by virtue of the fact that Weir Group was by a narrow margin the largest shareholder in the DML consortium. Some 97 per cent. of payments relate to DML's activity as the term contract holder for managing the Devonport dockyard licensed area and associated refitting and defect rectification of ships, submarines and other vessels, and other work required by the authority. Contracts placed with companies in the Weir Group, mainly for pumps, compressors and ancillary equipment, account for the remaining 3 per cent. of payments.

For clarity of presentation, DML will be shown separately in the "1993 Defence Statistics".

Royal Ordnance, Radway Green

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will meet workers' representatives from British Aerospace Defence—Royal Ordnance, Radway Green to discuss procurement policy.

Mr. Aitken: If the hon. Member would like to lead such a delegation, I would be willing to meet it.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to negotiate a successor agreement to the explosives, propellants and related products agreement with Royal Ordnance, Radway Green; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: We do not intend to negotiate a successor agreement to the explosives, propellants and related products agreement which expires in March 1993. This was always intended to be an interim arrangement. Our defence procurement policy is to seek the best long-term value for money through the use of competition wherever possible.

Channel Islands (War Records)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what documents his Department holds relating to the wartime Nazi crimes in the camps on Alderney in the Channel islands; and which such records have been given to the former Soviet authorities.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence does not hold any relevant papers. Detailed records of the British investigations into world war 2 war crimes in the Channel islands are available for public examination at the Public Record Office.

Copies of records relating to the investigations into the incidents on Alderney and Jersey were passed to the former Soviet authorities in October 1945.

Bosnia-Herzegovina

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 December, Official Report, column 166, what consultations there are between Bosnian military commanders and (a) United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, (b) Bosnia-Herzegovina command and (c) the national contingents of the United Nations protection force prior to the departure of each convoy; and if he will make a statements.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Consultation between Bosnian military commanders and United Nations agencies to ensure that humanitarian aid convoys are able to proceed to their destination takes place in a workingg group, chaired by Major General Morillon, Commander Bosnia-Herzegovina Command. Additionally, negotiations between the United Nations convoy commanders and local Bosnian military commanders, to take account of specific local conditions, take place if required as the convoy proceeds towards its destination.

Boards of Inquiry

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to release military board of inquiry reports to next of kin.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Service board of inquiry reports are internal documents relating to inquiries held in private. Their content is often technical and complex, and is likely to include specific description of the conduct of named service personnel in the incident under investigation including that of the deceased where the board of inquiry investigates a fatal accident.

In view of our obligations to the deceased and to their families, it would not be appropriate to make such documents widely available. We do, however, recognise the special position of next of kin and in future there will be a general presumption that, subject to the essential minimum of security requirements, such reports will be made available to them wherever possible, should they so request. This change of practice is in line with the Government's general policy towards greater openness. It also reflects our genuine concern to ensure that next of kin are treated in as sympathetic and helpful a manner as possible.

EMPLOYMENT

Deaths (Building Sites)

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average fine imposed on negligent employers in respect of deaths occurring on building sites over the last five years for which records have been maintained.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many deaths have occurred on building and construction sites over the last five years; and how many custodial sentences have been given to negligent employers in respect of these deaths.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available information for Great Britain is provided in the table. Data for the latest year commencing 1 April 1991 is not yet available.

Table: Fatal injuries in the construction industry reported to enforcement authorities 1986-87—1990-91[1]

Year	Employees	Self-employed	Members of public	Total
1986-87	99	26	14	139
1987-88	103	40	15	158
1988-89	101	36	14	151
1989-90	100	54	11	165
1990-91	96	28	9	133
Total	499	184	63	746

[1] Years commencing 1 April.

The courts can impose a custodial sentence for a range of offences under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974. The offence need not have resulted in a fatality or injury; the penalty of imprisonment is available regardless of the outcome. However, only one custodial sentence has been given within the last five years. It was not connected with the construction industry.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the number of (a) factory inspectors, (b) agricultural inspectors, (c) doctors and (d) nurses in the Health and Safety Executive area offices in (i) the Wales and south-west region and (ii) the home counties region in each year since 1978.

Mr. McLoughlin: (a) The number of Health and Safety (HSE) factory inspectors employed in Wales and the south-west region and home counties region in each year since 1978 was as follows:

Radiological Emergencies

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if she will provide regular updated information using non-technical language to the general public on the hazards of a potential radiological emergency in the United Kingdom;

(2) if she will target information on the hazards of a potential radiological emergency to (a) pregnant women and (b) emergency service personnel.

Mr. McLoughlin: The "Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations", which transpose the requirements of EC directive 89/618/Euratom into national legislation, was laid before the House on 8 December 1992. These regulations will require employers who conduct undertakings from which a radiation emergency is reasonably foreseeable to provide prescribed items of information to members of the public likely to be affected by any such emergency. This information needs to cover the likely emergencies that could arise, their consequences and the planned health protection measures for members of the public. The information also needs to be made publicly available and regularly updated.

The Health and Safety Executive is producing guidance on the regulations, particularly aimed at assisting those with duties under them. In addition to this, the Health and Safety Executive produced guidance in 1991 which gave advice to emergency services personnel on the control of radiation exposure in the event of a radiation emergency.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make it her policy to promote a standard national warning system to be operated during peacetime radiological emergencies.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. In the event of an accident at a civil licenced nuclear site having potential radiological effects off-site, the emergency plan prepared by the site's operator and approved by the Health and Safety Executive requires the operator to alert and inform the police. They will inform people in the vicinity of the site. Others at a greater distance from the site will be kept informed by special announcements on local radio and television.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make it her policy to extend the detailed planning arrangements for reference accidents for the different stages of the nuclear fuel cycle to cover larger accidents.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply

No. I consider that the present arrangements are adequate. At each major installation, detailed emergency planning is based on the worst nuclear accident that is reasonably foreseeable, known as the reference accident. These plans form the basis for an extended response in the very unlikely event that a more severe accident should occur.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in the textile industry, the clothing industry and the mining industry in the east midlands in each year since 1980.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available information on regional employment for the industries requested is from the censuses of employment taken in 1981, 1984, 1987 and 1989. Data for the east midlands can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library, subject to the confidentiality restrictions of the Statistics of Trade Act 1947.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the highest level of unemployment recorded in each of the three travel-to-work areas covered by the Selby district for each year since 1986.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 1 December, Official Report, column 173, how many people aged 16 and 17 years in the Carlisle travel-to-work area are not in employment, not on a youth training scheme and not in full-time education.

Mr. McLoughlin: In October 1992, there were 18 unemployed claimants aged 16 and 17 years in Carlisle travel-to-work area.

Changes to the benefit regulations in September 1988 coincided with the extension of a guaranteed youth training scheme (now youth training) place to all those aged under 18 not in full-time education or employment, which meant that those who declined an offer of a YTS place were no longer entitled to benefit. However, there are still a small number of under 18-year-olds entitled to benefit due to special circumstances, such as severe hardship or by virtue of their being orphans.

Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest information she has about the operating surplus which has been accumulated for each training and enterprise council for each region and for Great Britain as a whole on (a) youth training including training credits, (b) employment training, (c) employment action, and (d) business start up; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is unable to respond on behalf of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales who now have responsibility for the delivery of programmes through local enterprise councils in Scotland and training and enterprise councils in Wales.

Training and enterprise councils in England are required, under the terms of the training and enterprise council operating agreement, to produce audited accounts within four months of the end of the financial year.

These accounts reveal the total operating surplus as at the end of the financial year and on a cumulative basis; however, this information is not published by programme block.

The accounts for the financial year ending 31 March 1992 are now in the public domain and available from individual training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether it is her policy that training and enterprise councils shall pass on to training providers the cash to pay allowances to trainees in advance of the relevant pay day or within seven days of those costs falling on the training providers.

Mr. McLoughlin: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) are responsible for the funding arrangements which they have with their providers. It is for these two parties to agree such arrangements.

Disabled Trainees

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make it her policy to allow training and enterprise councils to utilise a wider range of performance indicators for disabled trainees than those currently suggested within the output-relating funding arrangements.

Mr. McLoughlin: Training and enterprise councils already have the flexibility to recognise in their contracts with providers outputs additional to those for which they receive funding from the Department.

Wages Councils

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 1 December to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short), Official Report, column 172, if she will list those organisations or individuals whose representations she has received supporting abolition of the wages councils, and those who oppose the proposal.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. Representations are treated on the basis that they have been offered "in confidence".

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimates her Department has made of changes in wage levels in industries covered by wages councils as a result of their abolition.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The abolition of the wages councils will allow wages to reflect labour market conditions and the ability of companies to pay. Since 1986, when young people were removed from the minimum rates set by wages councils, their average earnings have continued to rise in real terms.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 54, if she will list the wages councils in whose areas of competence a prosecution was brought for each of the lowest levels of payment in each region in each year since 1986.

Mr Michael Forsyth: The information is listed in the table.

New Opportunities for Women Initiative

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what moneys have been deployed by way of the European Community's new opportunities for women initiative under article 11 of Council regulation (EEC) No. 4253/88 (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole in (i) 1991 and (ii) so far this year; what kind of employment and training programmes were funded in this way; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of £6,369,996 has been made available to Great Britain under the European Community initiative NOW for the period 1991 to 1993. The amount committed to successful Scottish projects was £999,411, with one project in Strathclyde of £142,336. The allocation of funds has been made over the life of the programme, rather than on a calendar-year basis.

All the projects aim to help women to take full advantage on equal terms of economic growth and technological development through the funding of transnational partnerships between organisations in two or more member states.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what moneys have been deployed by way of the European Community's NOW initiative under article 11 of Council regulation (EEC) No. 4253/88 in England and Wales in (a) 1991 and (b) so far this year; what kind of employment and training programmes were funded in this way; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of £6,369,996 has been made available to Great Britain under the European Community initiative NOW for the period 1991 to 1993. The amount committed to successful projects in England and Wales was £5,260,435. The allocation of funds has been made over the life of the programme, rather than on a calendar-year basis.

All the projects aim to help women to take full advantage on equal terms of economic growth and technological development through the funding of transnational partnerships between organisations in two or more member states.

Social Affairs Council

Mr. Duncan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the outcome of the meeting on 3 December of the Social Affairs Council in Brussels; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Social Affairs Council had a useful meeting on 3 December, adapting a number of instruments and making good progress on others.

The Council adopted a wide-ranging resolution concerned with the serious and deteriorating problem of unemployment throughout the Community. The resolution emphasised the importance of achieving sound economic growth and the conditions necessary for the creation and growth of businesses. The resolution underlined the importance of effective labour market measures—in particular, quality employment services for those looking for a job and training which is geared to the needs of the labour market. The resolution identified various ways in which the Council and European Commission would continue to give high priority to the issue of unemployment, including in the forthcoming review of the European social fund. This resolution flows from the employment initiative launched by the United Kingdom presidency and was warmly welcomed by the Council.

Other useful measures agreed at the Council include a health and safety directive concerned with extractive industries, a resolution to promote the acceptance of vocational qualifications across the Community, and conclusions on the importance of ensuring timely and fully effective implementation and enforcement of EC social directives throughout the Community.

In discussion, progress was made on a range of further proposals in the social area including the HELIOS programme for disabled people, the directive on subcontracted workers, and instruments concerned with the free movement of labour and with health and safety at work.

The working time directive was also discussed. However, the directive continues to pose significant difficulties for a number of member states and it was not possible for progress to be made on this instrument.

This meeting of the Council formed an important part of the aim of the United Kingdom presidency to make sensible progress on the EC social dimension, in ways which directly affect for the better the lives of individual citizens in the Community.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Social Affairs Council on 3 December; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Chingford (Mr. Duncan-Smith) today.

SCOTLAND

Health Spending

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much of the planned spending on health for 1993-94 will come from savings not yet specified.

Mr. Stewart: The expenditure plans for health announced recently by my right hon. Friend represents the cash resources he has made available to the NHS in Scotland. However, we encourage health boards to seek to finance further improvements to patient services from efficiency savings.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many portable halon fire extinguishers are contained within his Department's buildings; and what measures are being taken to ensure their recycling and replacement;

(2) what measures have been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances in use by his Department identified as controlled waste under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 do not reach the atmosphere;

(3) how many chlorofluorocarbon domestic fridges are contained within his Department's buildings;

(4) what targets have been set for the recycling of ozone-depleting chemicals within his Department's buildings;

(5) what is the quantity of ozone-depleting substances recycled within his Department and returned to the manufacturer;

(6) by what date his Department's use of ozone-depleting chemicals will conform to EC regulations on limits on these chemicals;

(7) how much funding has been allocated or spent to deal specifically with measures to reduce his Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances;

(8) what action has been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances consumed by his Department are identified as controlled wastes when they are no longer in use;

(9) if he will provide details from the maintenance and servicing record of the quantity and type of ozone-destroying chemicals used annually in his Department's refrigeration and air conditioning equipment for servicing and in leakages; and what proportion is removed for recycling;

(10) how many chlorofluorocarbon and hydrochlorofluorocarbon installations are contained within his Department's buildings;

(11) how many refrigeration and air conditioning systems in his Department are equipped with automatic leak detection systems;

(12) what proportion of his Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances becomes controlled waste in terms of section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990;

(13) what guidance has been sought and received on alternatives or substitutes to the ozone-destroying chemicals in use by his Department;

(14) which current uses of ozone-depleting chemicals by his Department are considered essential.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 November]: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as the necessary information has been collated.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest available figures for his Department's total purchase of CFCs and HCFCs.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 November]: The information required could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many civil servants are employed by his Department (a) in London, (b) in Edinburgh and (c) elsewhere.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 December 1992]: At 30 November 1992 the number of civil servants employed by the Scottish Office, excluding the Scottish prison service, was 6,427 of whom 39 were located in London, 4,850 in the Edinburgh area and 1,538 elsewhere.

Schools (Disciplinary Proceedings)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what role his Department has in any disciplinary proceedings in locally or directly managed schools.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 December 1992]: Responsibility for teacher discipline in Scotland lies with education authorities, the managers of grant-aided and independent schools and, in respect of professional misconduct, the General Teaching Council for Scotland.

Prisons

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what expenditure has been incurred to date by the Scottish Office in undertaking the review of the prison estate announced in 1990; and when he expects a report to be published.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 December 1992]: The review of the prisons estate in Scotland, which was completed earlier this year, was undertaken by officials from the Scottish Office and the Scottish prison service. It would be impractical to separate and quantify this part of their duties in expenditure terms. The results of this work are not intended to be published, but they will be of assistance in developing a strategy for the prisons estate which will make the most effective use of the increased level of funding for the Scottish prison service announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 2 December.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many qualified prison staff were employed at each Scottish prison at the latest available date; and if he will show this as a percentage of the recommended complement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 December 1992]: The complements and staff in post on 1 December 1992 for each establishment in the Scottish prison service are given in the table.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what expenditure has been incurred to date by the Scottish Office in connection with proposals for privatisation, market testing and contracting-out in the Scottish prison service.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 December]: The best estimate of cost to date, including staff time and consultancy fees, in connection with the market-testing programme for 1992-93 in the Scottish prison service is approximately £50,000.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what impact the securing of objective 1 status for the highlands and islands to EC structural funding would have upon the funding package of the bridge to Skye; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 7 December]: The level and scope of future structural fund support for the highlands and islands will be dependent on the outcome of negotiations on the future of the Community and the reform of the structural funds dues to be implemented on 1 January 1994. I cannot anticipate what view might be taken under the revised regulations of an application for assistance towards the cost of constructing the bridge to Skye.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy towards the application to other potential commercial operators of a prohibition similar to that imposed upon Caledonian MacBrayne in running a vehicle-carrying ferry in competition with the Skye bridge once complete; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 December]: My right hon. Friend has no power to prevent a private operator from providing such a service. Any private operator would, of course, require to satisfy the appropriate certification requirements for ferry operators.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations or advice he has received from the European Commission concerning sanctuaries in the vicinity of Kyle of Lochalsh, in the light of the construction of the bridge to Skye; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 December]: There have been no representations or advice received by my right hon. Friend from the European Commission concerning sanctuaries in the vicinity of Kyle of Lochalsh.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many police officers are now involved in detective work relating to Lockerbie and Pan AM 103.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 December 1992]: There are currently five officers of the Dumfries and Galloway constabulary engaged in work relating to the Lockerbie investigation.

Defence Initiative

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of the Scottish defence initiative with specific regard to the funds available for this purpose to Scottish Enterprise and the local enterprise companies.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 3 December 1992]: Scottish Enterprise announced on 3 September this year details of a three-year strategy to help companies adjust to falling defence orders, diversify into other markets and compete more effectively with other European contractors for remaining defence work. Based on an in-depth analysis of the Scottish defence sector, the strategy represents a significant step forward in helping companies respond to rapidly changing defence markets.

It is for Scottish Enterprise and the local enterprise companies to determine the priority and resources to be allocated to measures arising out of the initiative. Scottish Enterprise, however, attaches high priority to the initiative and measures associated with it; and it is likely, therefore, that proposals arising out of the initiative included in local enterprise companies' business plans will be given favourable consideration by Scottish Enterprise in reaching its decisions about funding support.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Scrapie

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether, in considering the application by Dr. Narang and Professor Gxford to investigate the single-stranded DNA of scrapie, he will make it his policy that persons involved in doing similar research within his own Department do not form part of the application evaluation team.

Mr. Soames: No, but the normal requirements of confidentiality and impartiality will be followed in this case as in all other proposals for ministry support.

Canthaxanthin

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to receive reports from departmental advisory committees relating to canthaxanthin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: This matter is not under consideration by departmental committees. The position is that the latest scientific data are currently being evaluated by the EC Scientific Committee for Food. I have instructed officials to keep in touch with developments.

Orchards

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will state, in tabular form, the amount granted for the grubbing-up of apple orchards in each of the last five years under the apple orchard grubbing-up scheme; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proportion of the orchards grubbed-up, aided by his Department's apple orchard grubbing-up scheme, were (a) culinary and dessert apples and (b) cider apples; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what assessment of landscape and wildlife is made before the granting of aid under his Department's apple orchard grubbing-up scheme; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what mechanisms are in place to avoid conflicts of interest between his Department's apple orchard grubbing-up scheme and the Countryside Commission funded scheme providing incentives for replanting of traditional orchards in Somerset; and if he will make a statement;

(5) if he will conduct a departmental inquiry into the provision of grant aid for the grubbing-up of apple orchards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The apple orchard grubbing-up grant scheme opened to growers in February 1991. The final date for submission of applications was, 1 December 1992. To the end of September 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, grant of £1·6 million had been paid. All orchards grubbed-up under the scheme were of culinary and dessert apples. Cider apple orchards are not eligible for grant. The EC rules for the scheme do not permit member states to make eligibility for grant conditional upon an assessment of landscape and wildlife but applicants whose orchards are in a site of special scientific interest must consult the Nature Conservancy Council before grubbing-up. Applicants with orchards in nitrate sensitive areas or environmentally sensitive areas are recommended to seek the advice of the NSA or ESA project officer before making an application for grant. It is standard MAFF practice for policies such as this to be evaluated.

There is no conflict between this scheme and the Countryside Commission's scheme which have quite different objectives. The apple orchard grubbing-up scheme is aimed at reducing over production of culinary and dessert apples in the Community. Grant is therefore limited to young, productive, commercial orchards with a 15-year restriction on replanting. The Countryside Commission's scheme is concerned with encouraging the conservation of old, traditional orchards and apple varieties.

Civil Servants

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many civil servants from his Department have been relocated from London to other parts of the United Kingdom (a) in the last five years and (b) in the last 10 years; and to where they were relocated.

Mr. Curry: Apart from staff movements that occur routinely within any Department with a large regional organisation, over the past five years some 202 departmental posts have been relocated from London, of which 44 went to Guildford, 42 to Exeter, 19 to Norwich, 14 to Gloucester, 14 to Alnwick and 69 to Oxford. In the preceding five years, four London posts were moved to Alnwick.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to extend the protection and designation of environmentally sensitive areas to less favoured areas.

Mr. Curry: Environmentally sensitive areas (ESAs) have already been designated in four parts of the English less favoured areas: the north Peak, Pennine dales, Shropshire borders (Clun) and west Penwith. In January of next year we plan to launch new ESAs in the less favoured areas of Exmoor, the Lake district and south west Peak. We also plan to hold consultations on further new ESAs for Dartmoor and the Shropshire hills, which we hope to introduce in the following winter.

Fish

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the quota for each species of fish in each of the British fishing grounds for each of the last four years.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested, reflecting all quota exchanges made during each year, is set out in the following tables.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what forms of grant aiding of abattoirs are permitted under EC regulatory requirements.

Mr. Soames: The long-standing system of EC grants for projects for the marketing and processing of agricultural produce, which did not apply to slaughterhouses, closed on 30 September 1992. There is currently no replacement EC scheme.

Compliance with EC slaughterhouse standards has never brought with it any guarantee of help to defray the costs involved. Nor, though it is quite common for new statutory standards to be introduced, is it usual for grant aid to be provided to enable them to be achieved. The provision of such aid would be quite unfair on those who have already made the commitment of there own funds to come up to standard or those who have maintained their premises to comply with existing GB legislation and will have to do little to comply with the new rules.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of (a) the capacity of slaughtering facilities in the United Kingdom, (b) the extent to which the capacity of slaughtering facilities in the United Kingdom meets the demand for such activities and (c) the extent to which the capacity for slaughtering in the United Kingdom meets the requirements of small butchers to select livestock for slaughter.

Mr. Soames: The Meat and Livestock Commission estimates the theoretical Great Britain slaughter capacity after 1992 will be nearly 300,000 livestock units a week, compared with average weekly slaughterings in 1990-91 of fewer than 200,000 livestock units.

Where demand exists for particular types of slaughtering facilities, the market will no doubt ensure that this is met.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what EC mechanisms exist to ensure that all EC countries apply the regulations relating to abattoirs consistently; and what differences he has identified between the United Kingdom's approach to the use of veterinary personnel for inspection in abattoirs and that adopted by other EC countries.

Mr. Soames: All member states have to notify the Commission when and how they have implemented EC directives. In the red meat sector the Commission has a veterinary inspectorate which visits each member state regularly to ensure that the EC legislation is being properly applied.

The United Kingdom has traditionally made less use of veterinary personnel for food hygiene work than most other member states. The Government consider that veterinary surgeons have an important role at abattoirs in the protection of human and animal health, and therefore accepted the requirements in the EC Fresh Meat Directive 91/497 for all abattoirs to be supervised by a veterinary surgeon and for all animals to undergo veterinary ante-mortem inspection. This is already the position in most other member states, many of which also use qualified veterinary surgeons for post-mortem inspection which will normally continue to be done by meat inspectors in this country.

The United Kingdom has successfully resisted EC proposals for compulsory veterinary supervision of meat products plants.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) to what extent the welfare of casualty livestock being transported is taken into account in the implementation of EC regulations on abattoir standards;

(2) to what extent animal welfare considerations have been taken into account in determining implementation of EC regulations relating to abattoir standards.

Mr. Soames: The structural and handling requirements of the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992 take account of the need to protect the welfare of animals. The requirement for veterinary ante-mortem inspection of all animals post-1992 will provide further safeguards.

Casualty animals must receive speedy and compassionate treatment. No sick or injured animal should be transported at all if to do so would cause it unnecessary pain or suffering. Under the Fresh Meat Regulations all slaughterhouses have to have facilities to isolate animals which are diseased or injured or suspected of being diseased or injured. I am aware, however, that some large slaughterhouses may be reluctant to take in casualties and I will monitor the situation closely next year.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the European Commission on derogation for small abattoirs to be permitted to slaughter increased numbers of livestock.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply my right hon. Friend the Minister gave regarding safeguarding small traditional slaughterhouses on Wednesday, 3 December, Official Report, columns 223-24.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates he has made of the need for the increased movement of animals for slaughter arising out of EC requirements on slaughterhouse specifications.

Mr. Soames: None. There is no evidence that farmers always send animals to the nearest slaughterhouse and, of course, many animals go for slaughter via livestock markets.

Sheep Dips

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on the action he is taking to avoid damage to health through the use of certain organo-phosphorus sheep dips.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

The Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 (COSHH) apply to sheep dipping operations. They are enforced on farms by Health and Safety Executive (HSE) inspectors. During visits to farms, HSE inspectors draw attention to specific legal requirements and give advice and guidance on the precautions to be taken to prevent risks to health. Enforcement action is taken where necessary.

HSE has published a leaflet entitled "Sheep dipping: Protect your health". The leaflet provides guidance to farmers on compliance with COSHH when engaged in sheep dipping operations. It warns of the hazards of sheep dips and sets out the precautions to be taken before, during and after dipping.

HEALTH

Local Community Hospitals

12. Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what encouragement she can give to purchasers and providers within the health service to promote and sustain local community hospitals in rural areas.

Mr. Sackville: Both purchasers and providers now have an unprecedented opportunity to tailor health services to meet local needs. National health service trusts, in particular, have a greater freedom over day-to-day operational matters and can be more responsive to patients. Health authorities are in a better position to focus on assessing the health needs and preferences of the local population and securing services to meet those needs and preferences.

Smoking

13. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many death certificates mentioned smoking in 1979 and in the most recent year.

Dr. Mawhinney: Reliable information on this has not been available but, from next year, we hope that new procedures on death certification may produce more usable information.

Waiting Lists

14. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on patients' waiting times between referral and initial out-patient consultations.

Mr. Sackville: Under the patients charter, health authorities are required to publish information on the local standards for first out-patient appointments and on performance against standards. Regional health authorities have been asked to set targets to build on this progress for 1993-94.

18. Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress she expects to make in reducing waiting times under the patients charter.

Mr. Sackville: From April 1993, there will be a new and additional patients charter guarantee of a maximum wait of 18 months for a hip or knee replacement or a cataract operation. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State recently announced that regions would be asked to set targets for waiting time for first out-patient appointments.

19. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about the latest figure for waiting lists.

Mr. Sackville: On 11 November, I announced provisional waiting time figures for September which showed that the number of patients waiting over a year fell by 3·6 per cent. over the previous quarter.

NHS Trusts

15. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes she is considering to the consultation procedure relating to the creation of NHS trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The procedure for consulting community health councils and other appropriate bodies about establishing a national health service trust is laid down in the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990. I am not considering any changes to that procedure.

16. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what level of interest she has received in the fourth wave of NHS trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have given permission to 121 units to prepare national health service trust applications in the fourth wave. If they are successful, then 95 per cent. of the hospital and community health services budget will be spent through national health service trusts from April 1994. A list of 121 units has been placed in the Library.

Addiction and Alcoholism

17. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her policy on addiction and alcoholism.

Dr. Mawhinney: Our policies for preventing and reducing the damage which the misuse of alcohol and drugs can inflict are carried through in a series of co-ordinated programmes which include those being developed under "The Health of the Nation" and "Caring for People", and initiatives such as the highly successful European drug prevention week.

"The Health of the Nation"

20. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what nutritional recommendations her Department will make in order to meet the targets set out in "The Health of the Nation".

Dr. Mawhinney: As promised in the Government's White Paper, we have set up a nutrition task force, under the chairmanship of Dame Barbara Clayton, to recommend a co-ordinated action programme for meeting the nutrition targets.

The task force will meet for the first time on 16 December.

Fund-holding Practices

21. Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of complementary therapists employed in (a) fund-holding general practitioner practices and (b) non-fund-holding general practitioner practices.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. However, my hon. Friend will wish to know that it is open to all general practitioners to employ a wide range of staff, including complementary therapists, where appropriate, to assist them in the provision of general medical services.

26. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on progress being made by fund-holding practices.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is clear that fund-holding practices are delivering real benefits to patients. This is reflected in the growing number of practices joining the scheme, which we expect will cover one in four of the population from April 1993.

Prescription Charges

22. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to increase prescription charges; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Judgments are made each year about how finite health resources can be best targeted for maximum health gain. Prescription charges are one aspect of these considerations. Any announcements will be made at the appropriate time.

Elderly Population

23. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give her best estimates of the impact of the increase in the elderly population on health expenditure; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) earlier today.

London's Health Services

24. Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made in her consideration of the Tomlinson proposals of the effects on the waiting lists in south London if either St. Thomas's or Guy's hospital is closed.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Tomlinson report notes that significant progress has been made in reducing waiting times in London. We shall ensure that the proposals arising from the report continue this trend.

25. Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give an undertaking that no beds will be closed in London as a result of the Tomlinson inquiry before steps have been taken to improve community health services.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms. Jackson) on 26 November, at column 811.

Dentistry

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the current situation in Greenwich and Bexley regarding the processing of formal complaints regarding NHS dental treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: Greenwich and Bexley local dental committee has decided to withdraw its co-operation from dental service committees which are the statutory local bodies set up to investigate complaints alleging that a dentist has breached his or her terms of service. The National Health Service (Service Committees and Tribunal) Regulations require that dental servic committees include dental practitioners nominated by the local dental committee. Therefore, for the present, dental service committee investigations cannot be conducted for this family health services authority and three complaints are awaiting investigation. I very much regret that some dentists have decided to take action which disrupts this service to patients. I hope they will agree to resume co-operation.

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ensure that the service of salaried dentists will be made available throughout the family health services authority covering the Chorley constituency.

Dr. Mawhinney: An application for approval to appoint a salaried dentist to provide treatment in the Chorley and South Ribble area was received on 1 December. We are dealing with the application as a matter of priority.

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the pay review body for dentists is due to commence and complete its investigations.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 9 July 1992 that Sir Kenneth Bloomfield had been appointed to carry out a fundamental review of the dental remuneration system. Sir Kenneth has been asked to report before the end of the year.

Patient Statistics

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of patients being treated as out-patients and in-patients in (a) England and (b) the north-west in 1975 and 1991.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is given in the table.

	In-patients[1]	Out-patients
England
1975	4,975,750	30,947,482
1990-91	7,524,192	36,130,499
North western region
1975	453,481	2,737,230
1990-91	733,809	3,482,235

[1] For 1975, the information refers to finished hospital stays (discharges and deaths). For 1990-91, the information refers to finished consultant episodes.

A finished hospital stay is a discharge from a hospital—or a death in a hospital—or transfer to another hospital.

A finished consultant episode is a completed period of care of a patient using a bed under the care of one consultant in a particular health authority, and will therefore tend to record a higher count. Finished consultant episodes includes a count of healthy live-born babies who were not counted as finished hospital stays.

Osteopathy

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what recent consideration she has given to the regulation of osteopathy; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will make it her policy that patients who consult an osteopath should have a guarantee that their practitioner is trained to minimum standards of competence and is regulated by a governing body capable of enforcing an appropriate code of practice.

Mr. Sackville: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Sevenoaks (Mr. Wolfson) on 3 December at column 320.

Natural Medicines

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to ensure that the cost-effectiveness and value of natural medicines are known to health authorities, hospitals, doctors and community health organisations.

Mr. Sackville: The Department sponsors work on cost-effectiveness of interventions in various universities and is currently funding a team of researchers from York and Leeds universities to produce a series of "effectiveness bulletins" to provide information for the national health service. Information bulletins are also produced by the medicines resources centre which provide data on the clinical impact of various pharmaceuticals and their costs of administration. This work is of recent origin and currently covers only a small proportion of interventions. So far, there has been no work on natural medicines, but it is not ruled out in the future.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how natural medicines will be incorporated into the strategy behind the Government White Paper, "The Health of the Nation".

Mr. Sackville: The national health service, in partnership with voluntary and other organisations, may adopt a variety of approaches in meeting the targets set in the five key areas selected initially for development of "The Health of the Nation" strategy. Natural therapies may be incorporated in local programmes where they are considered appropriate and cost-effective.

Unlicensed Medicines

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to strengthen laws relating to those who supply products that are not licensed as medicines but are advertised or labelled as such.

Dr. Mawhinney: The enforcement unit of the Medicines Control Agency investigates all reports of an unlicensed product being supplied or promoted as a medicinal product, and appropriate action is taken to prevent the supply of such products.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the hospitals in the west midlands region, indicating in respect of each (a) whether they provide neurosurgery and neurology and (b) whether they have the provision of magnetic resonance imaging.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir James Ackers, the chairman of West Midlands regional health authority, for details.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the revenue and capital allocations for regional health authorities in 1993-94.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Main revenue allocations for resident population are set out in table 1. These are provisional until Parliament has approved the relevant Supply estimate.

Regions are to receive an average cash increase of 2·7 per cent., and I have decided that all regions should get a minimum increase of 0·4 per cent. above forecast inflation for the hospital and community health services of 1·9 per cent.

This is mainly to enable all regions to make further progress towards resource equalisation between districts.

I will announce capital cash limits for regional health authorities and the external financing limits of national health service trusts at a later date. Table 2 sets out the planning totals for each region. Regional health authorities and NHS Management Executive outposts will be giving me agreed proposals for the deployment of these planning totals between the regional capital programme and NHS trusts within each region.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing the financial allocation for each regional health authority for 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: The table shows the 1992-93 revenue allocation for resident population of each regional health authority as announced on 5 December 1991 by the then Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave), at columns 262-63.

In addition to initial allocations for resident population, regions are given cash limit additions for specific purposes throughout the year.

For details of the regional allocation for 1993-94, I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Martin) today.

Low Birth Weight

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of the factors which result in low birth weight of children born to mothers resident in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in receipt of income support.

Mr. Sackville: Studies have shown that there are many factors associated with low birth weight. It is difficult to identify individual risk factors which may be significant in particular circumstances, for instance, women living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation. However, the importance of a balanced diet for the general health and well-being of pregnant women and their children has long been recognised and for that reason, pregnant women receiving income support are entitled to free milk and supplementary vitamins. Other important considerations are timely access to antenatal care and advice from relevant health professionals and reducing smoking in pregnancy, the latter being a significant factor in weight differences between babies. As a priority for 1992-93, the chief executive of the National Health Service Management Executive has asked all health authorities to focus on measures to reduce smoking in pregnancy and to improve women's access to maternity services. A number of innovative schemes have been introduced by health authorities across the country to improve access to maternity care for women living in the inner city. A scheme in Mersey region, based at the Princes Park health centre in Toxteth, is directing services specifically at women living in bed-and-breakfast and hostel accommodation.

Audit Commission

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the work of the Audit Commission in respect of the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: The National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 extended the remit of the Audit Commission to include the external audit of health bodies. This encompasses the audit of financial regularity and studies aimed at improving the economy, efficiency and effectiveness with which services are provided. The work of the commission is described more fully in its annual report, copies of which are available in the Library.

NHS Chairmen

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria she uses in selecting and appointing chairmen of national health service trusts and health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: Chairmen and members are appointed to national health service trusts and health authorities for the personal qualities, knowledge and skills they can bring to the post.

NHS Pay

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance will be issued to enforce the 1·5 per cent. pay rise ceiling she has set for NHS staff; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) on 23 November at column 505.

Medical Complaints

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will take measures to speed up medical complaints procedures and make them more patient-friendly.

Mr. Sackville: The patients charter has given people the right to have any complaint about national health service services—whoever provides them—investigated and to receive a full and prompt written reply from the chief executive or the general manager.

In addition, the recent extension of the patients charter into primary health care has set targets for family health services authorities to improve their performance in dealing with complaints about general medical services.

Hib Vaccine

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the arrangements for general practitioners to call in children aged seven to 11 months in order for them to be vaccinated with haemophilus influenzae type B vaccine.

Mr. Sackville: Haemophilus influenzae B (Hib) immunisation was launched on 1 October this year as a major addition to the Government's programme for the prevention of childhood diseases. General practitioners were sent an information pack at the end of July, which explained the need for a phased schedule of immunisation to ensure that those children most at risk from invasive haemophilus disease—aged up to 12 months—were immunised first. In accordance with the schedule children aged between seven and 11 months are being called in for immunisation between October 1992 and March 1993. The objective is to immunise all children aged under four years by September 1993.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children have been inoculated with haemophilus influenzae type B since it was introudced between the ages of seven and 11 months; and how many such children have been refused such inoculation in the current year.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the numbers of children immunised with Hib vaccine between the ages of seven and 11 months is not available. Arrangements have been made for all these children to be offered Hib vaccine in accordance with the call-up schedule provided for general practitioners and clinics. Two million doses of Hib vaccine had been made available nationally by the end of November.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent publicising the dangers of haemophilus influenzae to children between the ages of seven and 11 months.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health and the Health Education Authority have worked together in preparing publicity about haemophilus influenzae b (Hib) immunisation. Publicity is being directed at parents with children aged under four years with special emphasis on children aged under one year because these children are more vulnerable to the disease. Expenditure on television advertising, local radio campaigns, display advertisements in the mother and baby press, leaflets and posters will amount to £1·4 million in the current financial year.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much of the haemophilus influenzae type B vaccine has been made available to general practitioners in Devon; and if she will make a statement on the rationing arrangements for haemophilus influenzae type B vaccine to doctors in Devon for inoculation of children aged seven to 11 months.

Mr. Sackville: The distribution of the two brands of haemophilus influenzae type b (Hib) vaccine to the health districts in Devon for delivery to both general practitioners and clinics up to 30 November is set out. The number of doses of Act Hib required in each district were calculated according to a formula based on the local birth rate.

Health district	Act Hib (mainly for children below 12 months of age. These children receive 3 doses each.) Doses	Hib TITER (for children between 1 and 4 years of age. These children receive 1 dose each.) Doses
Exeter	4,240	1,350
North Devon	3,150	2,270
Plymouth	10,460	5,700
Torbay	3,860	2,870

A further delivery of the Act Hib vaccine, 3,000 doses for Exeter and 500 doses for Plymouth, was due to be made on 7 December.

The orders that have been fulfilled and the amount planned for delivery over the coming months will be enough to enable all children in Devon under the age of four to be immunised by September 1993. It is the responsibility of local health authorities to arrange equitable distribution of the vaccine they receive, according to the requirements of clinics and general practitioners, and to make any adjustments to the supply arrangements considered necessary.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about the availability of haemophilus influenza type B vaccine; from where it is purchased; how much has been spent on it; and what problems have arisen in relation to distribution.

Mr. Sackville: The vaccine is supplied by two manufacturers, Merieux under the name "Act Hib", and Lederle/Praxis under the name "Hib TITER". In the first two months of the programme, 2 million doses were distributed. By March 1993, the number of doses distributed will have increased to 5 million—more than enough to cover all children aged under one year and to allow for the immunisation of many older children who would otherwise be called in at a later stage in the programme. The objective is to immunise all children under four years of age by September 1993. Expenditure so far has totalled £9 million, with further substantial payments to be made in this and future financial years. If there are any local problems on distribution, it is for the responsible health authority to take the necessary action to put matters right.

Wellbury House

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice has been given to Hertfordshire social services department in relation to future steps to regulate activities at Wellbury house;

(2) what assessment she has made of the suitability of conditions at Wellbury house for people under the age of 18 years to reside in the premises; and if she will make a statement;

(3) what steps have been taken to register Wellbury house in Hertfordshire as a voluntary children's home; when application forms were received; what action she has taken; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: It is the responsibility of Hertfordshire county council to judge whether conditions at Wellbury house are suitable for children accommodated there. General guidance on the protection of the welfare of children has been issued to all local authorities.

Ashworth Special Hospital

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her plans to review conditions at Ashworth special hospital.

Mr. Yeo: The report of the committee of inquiry into complaints about Ashworth hospital, chaired by Sir Louis Blom-Cooper QC, was published on 5 August. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made it clear that we and the Special Hospitals Service Authority (SHSA) accepted the great majority of the report's recommendations, and set out the action being taken on the issues it raised.

The finding of improper conduct and ill-treatment of patients by a number of staff were to be dealt with in accordance with the SHSA's disciplinary procedures. As a result of these two of the staff concerned have now been dismissed, one has been demoted, two given final written warnings and one a first written warning. In five cases no action was taken following the disciplinary hearing and one case was not proceeded with.

My right hon. Friend also stated that the SHSA were drawing up an action plan for implementing the agreed recommendations and that a task force was being formed at the hospital—with reinforcement from outside—to take immediate responsibility for carrying it out. We have approved the action plan which the SHSA submitted, as it was required to, at the end of August. The work of the task force is supervised by a steering committee comprising the chairman, vice-chairman and chief executive of the SHSA, which is submitting regular progress reports to me. We will be arranging an independent audit of the action taken on the Inquiry report during the course of next year.

The inquiry reported on unacceptable literature being circulated at the hospital and two former senior police officers have been appointed to investigate this. To date, two members of staff have been suspended as a result of these investigations.

My right hon. Friend also announced that we were forming a working group to consider the most effective provision of services for patients requiring psychiatric treatment in conditions of high security, and the relationship between such services and those provided within national health service regions and the prison service. This group, which is chaired by Dr. John Reed of the Department of Health, started work in October and is due to report by April next year.

My right hon. Friend's statement made clear our concern about the findings of the Inquiry report about a number of aspects of the care and treatment provided at Ashworth hospital. It also recognised the excellent work which is done at Ashworth by many dedicated staff. The action we have taken, and which is continuing, demonstrates our commitment to support and develop this work while tackling the deficiencies revealed by the report and their underlying causes.

Cancelled Operations

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for every health authority in England (a) the total number and (b) the percentage of operating theatre sessions cancelled in 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: Information at district health authority level for 1991-92 is not yet available. A summary booklet containing the information will be published early in the new year and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Hospital Consultations

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of introducing job evaluation schemes for hospital consultations in the west midlands; and whether the work was awarded as a result of competitive tender.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is a matter for West Midlands regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Hamza Aziz, the chairman of West Midlands RHA, for details.

Codex Alimentarius Commission

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the activities of the Codex Alimentarius Commission; and what discussions her Department has had with the commission.

Mr. Sackville: The Codex Alimentarius Commission (CAC) is a subsidiary body of the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations and the World Health Organisation. Membership is open to all member nations and associate members of the two organisations. The CAC aims to facilitate world food trade through agreed, harmonised standards with adequate protection for consumer health. CAC work is done through subsidiary committees which deal with particular commodities and general food issues, and through regional groupings for geographical areas.

This Department plays a full and active part in the Committee on Food Hygiene and is currently drafting a revised text on general principles of food hygiene for that committee.

The document "Introducing Codex Alimentarius" contains full details on the work of the CAC and I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library.

NHS Supplies Authority

Mr. Bluphett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the financial turnover for the National Health Service Supplies Authority in the last year for which figures are available; and if she will make a statement on its future operation.

Dr. Mawhinney: The National Health Service Supplies Authority was established in October 1991 but has only assumed full operational responsibility for all supply matters with effect from 1 October 1992. Its annualised turnover for the current financial year is expected to be £510 million, plus an additional £3,000 million for goods and services procured on behalf of customers which are delivered and invoiced directly to them.

NHS Supplies was set up:

- to provide a professional and responsive supplies service that meets both the present and future needs of its customers;
- to ensure the best value for money for every pound the NHS spends on goods and services; and
- to save its customers money that could be better spent on health care.

The performance of NHS Supplies against targets agreed with the authority will be subject to continuing scrutiny by the NHS Management Executive.

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give for each of the last five years for England and for each national health service region (a) the total number of whole-time equivalent nurses and midwives employed in the hospital and community health services on 30 September and (b) the total number of agency nurses and midwives working in the hospital and community health services on 30 September.

Mr. Sackville: The information is given in the tables.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the savings which might accrue from the extensions to the limited list prescribing system which have been announced; and when it was made.

Dr. Mawhinney: Savings will depend on the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information the advisory committee which is to consider the new categories on the limited list has been given about the savings which it is hoped might be made by the Department through the extension of the limited list prescribing system.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the advisory committee which is to consider the new categories relating to the limited list prescribing system is able to recommend a nil entry under one or more category heading.

Dr. Mawhinney: Yes.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whom she consulted about the definitions of the new categories which are to be considered in connection with the limited list prescribing system; and when that consultation took place.

Dr. Mawhinney: The new categories reflect those used in the British National Formulary which are generally recognised by doctors and dentists and pharmacists.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies she conducted, and what criteria she used in assessing the results, in coming to an assessment on the impact on patients and other users of her decision to extend the limited list prescribing arrangements.

Dr. Mawhinney: No such studies were necessary. Extending the scope of the selected list scheme to ten new therapeutic categories will not affect patients' or other users' ability to receive the medicines they need when they need them and for as long as they need them. As now, decisions on individual drugs will be taken on the basis of advice from the independent Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs comprising doctors, dentists and pharmacists appointed after consultation with relevant professional organisations. The drugs necessary to meet all clinical needs will remain available on NHS prescription.

Community Care

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to ensure that education opportunities paid for by her Department for people returning to the community from long-stay institutions are not reduced when responsibility for funding further and continuing education is transferred from local authority control in April 1993; what plans she has in place to monitor such provision; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The establishment of the further education funding councils, from April 1993, and the transfer to them of some of the local education authorities' statutory duties to secure the provision of further education, has not changed local authorities duties towards disabled people under section 2(1)(c) of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970. Local authorities have a clear duty under this Act to make arrangements for assisting a disabled person, who is ordinarily resident in their area, in taking advantage of educational opportunities available to him or her, if they are satisfied that it is necessary in order to meet that person's needs. Such assistance might, in appropriate cases, include the funding by the local authority of the personal care required to enable the student in question to pursue his or her studies. It is, of course, for the authority to decide in each case, what the individual's needs are, and how they are to be met.

Prime responsibility for monitoring the implementation of the Act rests with local authorities themselves, to ensure that their policies are compatible with their legal obligations. The Department receives regular returns on certain services provided by local authorities under the Act, as well as information from other sources including the social services inspectorate. We follow up specific cases, referred to the Department, where it is alleged that a local authority is in breech of its statutory duties.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received concerning her requirement for local authorities to spend a fixed percentage of community care funding on independent sector provision after April.

Mr. Yeo: We have consulted widely on our proposals for funding community care. I received a number of representations on this particular point, all of which were carefully considered before the final decision was reached.

Nutrition Task Force

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on (a) the establishment of her Department's nutritution task force, (b) its terms of reference, (c) its timetable for reporting and (d) the names of the members of the task force and their professional qualifications.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the membership of the nutrition task force on 7 December 1992. The terms of reference are to be agreed at its first meeting on 16 December 1992. We anticipate receiving the nutrition task force's report on the proposed action programme by late spring 1993, details will then be published. Further details are available in the Library (Department of Health press notice H92/438).

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to implement the existing guidelines of "The Health of the Nation" White Paper; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The nutrition task force will consider the opportunities for the promotion of healthy eating. This will include issuing voluntary nutritional guidelines for catering establishments.

NHS Surgery Costs

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated average cost of NHS procedures for (a) total hip replacement, (b) total knee replacement, (c) coronary artery bypass grafting, (d) mitral/aortic valve replacement, (e) hernia repair, (f) stripping of varicose veins, (g) hysterectomy, (h) tonsillectomy, (i) cataract extraction/lens implant, (j) kidney transplant, (k) heart transplant and (l) heart/lung transplant.

Mr. Sackville: The information available is shown in the table. All estimates of average cost are at 1991-92 prices and inclusive of an allowance for capital charges. Estimates are not available for total knee replacement, stripping of varicose veins, and heart/lung transplant procedures.

NHS procedure	Estimated average cost (£-1991-92 prices)
Hip Replacement	3,810
Coronary Artery by-pass graft	5,870
Heart Valve Replacement	8,800
Inguinal Hernia	1,140
Hysterectomy	2,050
Tonsillectomy	590
Cataract Extraction	1,230
Kidney Transplant	13,050
Heart Transplant	26,400

NHS Expenditure

27. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many extra patients are expected to be treated as a result of the financial settlement for the NHS in 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: We expect an increase of at least 2·5 per cent. in hospital and community health service activity in the national health service in 1993-94. This corresponds to about 190,000 acute in-patients and day cases and an extra 1 million community nursing contacts with equivalent increases in other areas.

28. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the Government plans to spend on the NHS in 1993-94; and what was spent in 1978-79.

Mr. Sackville: Government spending on the NHS in England is planned to be £29 billion in 1993-94, compared with £6·3 billion in 1978-79. This represents a real terms increase of over 59 per cent.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the level of current spending on the hospital and community health services for each NHS region and for the special health authorities, in each year since 1974-75 (a) in cash terms, (b) adjusted using the gross domestic product deflator and (c) adjusted using the NHS pay and prices index.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 11 November 1992]: The information requested for the financial years 1974-75 to 1990-91 is shown in the table. Information for 1991-92 will be available shortly.

Source: Annual accounts of regional and district health authorities in England and those of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals. (Predecessor authorities prior to 1983-83)

Notes:

1. HCHS—covers all the services managed and/or accounted for by the authorities during the relevant financial years. It includes hospital, community health, patient transport (ie ambulance), blood transfusion and other services.

2. The figures have been expressed in input volume terms at 1991-92 prices by the use of the HCHS revenue pay and prices index—currently available to 1991-92, only—and in real terms at 1991-92 prices by the use of gross domestic product deflators. Some columns may not add up precisely because of roundings.

3. The figures for all regions prior to 1985-86 include an element for the administrative expenses of family practitioner committees, which prior to 1 April 1985 were associated with district health authorities, and such costs were not separately identified.

4. During the period a number of boundary changes occurred—most significantly between North East and North West Thames regions between 1981-82 and 1982-83.

5. Capital expenditure and all expenditure incurred by special health authorities providing central services to the NHS is excluded.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the new initiatives planned by Her Majesty's Government to stop the spread of nuclear weapons, mentioned in the pamphlet "Britain in Europe".

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Maastricht European Council agreed that nuclear non-proliferation was an area where member states might take joint action under the Maastricht treaty. Preparatory work by the Twelve has begun on specific initiatives that might be taken, to be completed by the entry into force of the treaty.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the specific new measures taken by European political co-operation during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council to strengthen nuclear non-proliferation policy of the European Community.

Mr. Garel-Jones: During the United Kingdom presidency, the European non-proliferation working group has met twice. In addition to its general discussions, it has specifically decided, in order to assist the International Atomic Energy Agency in the discharge of its safeguards obligations, that the Community and its member states will provide to the agency, on a voluntary basis, additional information on production inventories and international transfers of nuclear material and on exports of certain relevant equipment and non-nuclear material. The provision of this information will begin next year.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government with respect to adherence to the restrictions and guidelines set out in the series of International Atomic Energy Agency documents known as INFCIRC/209; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: INFCIRC/209/Rev.1 was published in November 1990 and incorporates amendments made since the original document was released in 1974. The document has no status in international law, but the arrangements it contains are an important contribution to the non-proliferation regime and are fully adhered to by Her Majesty's Government, who insist on full-scope safeguards as a condition for the supply of nuclear materials and equipment listed in the document.

Albania

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will inform the Albanian Government that arms sales by Britain are conditional on the ending of public executions in that country.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) on 30 November, at column 4, concerning our policy on arms sales to Albania.

East Timor

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to encourage the Indonesian Government to allow human rights groups and journalists access to East Timor.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Journalists and non-governmental organisations have been able to visit East Timor. In our regular contacts with the Indonesian Government, we encourage them to facilitate such access.

BBC World Service

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria he uses to measure the efficiency and effectiveness of the BBC World Service.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the World Service regularly review the performance and cost-effectiveness of World Service broadcasts in meeting agreed objectives and targets. The main factors are the audibility of broadcasts, the size and profile of their audiences and the impact and influence of programmes.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the benefits accruing to Britain from the introduction of the BBC World Service Television.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We welcome the success of BBC World Service Television in bringing high-quality British TV news reporting and other programmes to international audiences over an increasing area of the world. Reports from various sources, including our diplomatic missions, indicate that WSTV news and current affairs broadcasts are making a significant contribution to Britain's standing abroad.

United Nations Forces

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the total number of troops currently operating under the auspices of the United Nations, indicating the countries to which they have been sent, the countries that have supplied them, and the Security Council resolutions under which they operate.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The troops currently operating under the auspices of the United Nations, in the various peacekeeping operations, broken down by country of origin and by destination are shown in the tables.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Flintan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) physically disabled and (b) sensorily disabled people are employed in his Department; and what percentage they are of the total work force.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Foreign and Commonwealth office employs 53 registered disabled persons (RDPs): 27 in the diplomatic wing—0·4 per cent. of its total work force—and 26 in the Overseas Development Administration—1·38 per cent. of its total work force. Of the 26 RDPs employed by the ODA, 15 are physically disabled and 11 sensorily disabled. Details of individual's disabilities are not held centrally by the diplomatic wing.

The FCO holds no statistics on non-registered disabled staff, but it is likely that their numbers exceed those who have chosen to register.

World Decade for Cultural Development

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution his Department is making to UNESCO World Decade for Cultural Development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Carol-Jones: There are no plans at present to contribute.

United Nations Observers

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries to which the United Nations has sent observers to monitor United Nations resolutions, indicating in each case the number of observers, the period of time for which they are appointed, and the number of observers from each European Community member state.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The number of military observers currently deployed with each United Nations peace-keeping operation and their country of origin are shown in the table. The standard length of tour for an individual observer is six months:

Market-testing

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a timetable showing when he plans to market-test those activities listed for testing before 30 September 1993.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The timetable for market-testing our departmental activities listed in CM 2101 has as its target completion of the programme by 30 September 1993. Planning is under way.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to which of those of his Department's activities due to be market-tested by 30 September 1993 the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC acquired rights directive 77/189/EEC will apply.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Whether or not the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC acquired rights directive 77/189/EEC will apply to areas of work being market-tested depends on the circumstances of each case and the legal advice received by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office's market-testing programme has not reached the stage to enable definitive answers to be given in individual cases.

Azerbaijan

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the export of (a) military equipment and (b) equipment with both a military and civilian application to Azerbaijan.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have not approved licences for the export of any military equipment or equipment with military application to Azerbaijan: we adhere to the embargo called by the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (CSCE) on 28 February 1992 on the supply of weapons to the region of the Nagorno-Karabakh dispute. We are pressing for a widening of the CSCE embargo to cover military assistance generally.

Defence Exports

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each date when changes were made to the guidelines covering defence-related exports to (a) Iran and (b) Iraq since 1979.

Mr. Hurd [holding answer 24 November 1992]: Restrictions on Iran had been in force since the seizure of the American hostages in 1979, and on Iraq since the outbreak of the Iraq/Iran conflict in 1980. Guidelines applying to all deliveries of defence equipment to Iran and Iraq were introduced in December 1984 and announced on 29 October 1985. These were as follows:

(i) We should maintain our consistent refusal to supply any lethal equipment to either side.

(ii) Subject to that overriding consideration, we should attempt to fulfil existing contracts and obligations.

(iii) We should not, in future, approve orders for any defence equipment which, in our view, would significantly enhance the capability of either side to prolong or exacerbate the conflict.

(iv) In line with this policy, we should continue to scrutinise rigorously all applications for export licences for the supply of defence equipment to Iran and Iraq.

The development and application of the guidelines in relation to Iraq are within the terms of reference of the Scott inquiry.

Since 1991, guidelines for deliveries of defence equipment to Iran have been as follows:

(i) We should maintain our consistent refusal to supply any lethal equipment to either side.

(ii) Subject to that overriding consideration, we should attempt to fulfil existing contracts and obligations.

(iii) We should not in future approve orders for any equipment which, in our view, would significantly enhance Iran's military capability.

(iv) In line with this policy, we should continue to scrutinise rigorously all applications for export licences for the supply of defence equipment to Iran.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Market-testing

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a timetable showing when he plans to market-test those activities listed for testing before 30 September 1993.

Mr. Waldegrave: The timetable for market-testing in my Department ensures that the whole programme listed in Cm. 2101 will be completed by 30 September 1993. Preparations to execute the programme are well in hand and the first market tests are expected to be completed early in the new year.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to which of those of his Department's activities due to be market-tested by 30 September 1993 the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC acquired rights directive 77/189/EEC will apply.

Mr. Waldegrave: Whether or not the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC acquired rights directive 77/189/EEC will apply to an individual case depends on the facts of that case. Departments will seek advice of legal advisers about the relevance of TUPE on a case-by-case basis, as has been the case in the past.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Market-testing

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department to which of those of his Department's activities due to be market-tested by 30 September 1993 the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC acquired rights directive 77/189/EEC will apply.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The applicability of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC acquired rights directive 77/189/EEC will be considered on the facts of each individual case, and a number of tests will be applied. For example, it needs to be shown that an undertaking or part of an undertaking is actually being transferred. We are currently in the process of looking at the implications of TUPE and its applicability in relation to the areas being market-tested in the Lord Chancellor's Department, and are seeking the advice of our legal advisers about the relevance of TUPE on a case-by-case basis. No decisions have been made to date.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will publish a timetable showing when he plans to market-test those activities listed for testing before 30 September 1993.

Mr. John M. Taylor: My aim is to have the market-testing exercises for those areas listed in my Department's programme completed by 30 September 1993. This does not include county court bailiffs, as the timetable for the review of enforcement agents is dependent upon the approach taken following the recent consultation paper.

Planning of the market-testing exercises is well under way, and initial action is already taking place in most of the areas being market-tested. Significant milestones have been identified in the timetable for each of the areas, examples being that the tender evaluation process for typing services in the Public Trust Office is due in April 1993, and completion of the contract documentation for the pay unit is due by the end of May 1993.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Juvenile Remand Prisoners

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the longest time spent in an adult prison on remand in England and Wales (a) by a 14-year-old, (b) by a 15-year-old and (c) by a 16-year-old in the current year so far and in each of the last five years;

(2) what is the longest time spent in an adult prison in England and Wales following conviction (a) by a 14-year-old, (b) by a 15-year-old and (c) by a 16-year-old in the current year to date and in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Market-testing

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a timetable showing when he plans to market-test those activities listed for testing before 30 September 1993.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Our aim is to complete all the planned market tests on the listed activities before 30 September 1993. A detailed timetable has yet to be settled for all areas to be market-tested but market tests have already begun in the following areas:

Computer IT services
Statistical services
Office services
Education services in prisons
Management of HMP Manchester
Warehousing and distribution

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to which of those of his Department's activities due to be market-tested by 30 September 1993 the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and/or the EC acquired rights directive 77/189/EEC will apply.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 (TUPE) is the legislation by which the Government implemented the acquired rights directive 77/189/EEC. Whether TUPE should apply is dependent on whether the activity constitutes a "Transfer of Undertaking" or merely a change of supplier. Legal advice will be sought on a case-by-case basis as part of the market-testing process.

President-elect Clinton

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the circumstances surrounding the search in October through Home Office files in (a) the immigration and nationality department and (b) other Home Office departments in respect of President-elect Clinton; in response to what requests such a search was made; what is the normal procedure for dealing with such requests; what was the procedure in this case; and when Ministers (i) were informed and (ii) authorised the search.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In response to an inquiry by a journalist from the Evening Standard in October as to whether Mr. Clinton had applied for United Kingdom citizenship, the Home Office press office said that it was unable to discuss individual cases.

The press office then made inquiries of the nationality division to establish for itself the facts of the case. These revealed that there was no file in Mr. Clinton's name. The press office subsequently decided to brief newspapers off the record that there was no foundation to the story in order to bring ill-informed speculation about Mr. Clinton to an end.

No Minister was involved in any way or at any stage in the handling of the press inquiry. I have already announced that I shall be reviewing with my chief press officer the procedure for handling such inquiries in the future.

Immigration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many individuals were held in prison department establishments under Immigration Act powers, in each month from July 1991 to June 1992 (a) by prison department establishment and (b) length of detention;

(2) how many individuals are currently held in prison department establishments under Immigration Act powers, in total (a) by prison department establishment and (b) by length of detention.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information about detainees held in prison service establishments in England and Wales under the Immigration Act 1971 is not readily available by period of detention on a monthly basis. The available information is shown in the tables.

Aggravated Vehicle Taking Act 1992

Mr. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce proposals to increase the penalties available under the Aggravated Vehicle Taking Act 1992.

Mr. Jack: It is not our present intention to change the sentencing provisions of the Act. We have, however, made clear our intention to raise the maximum penalty for causing death by dangerous or drink driving to 10 years, as soon as a suitable legislative opportunity is available.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Fletcher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) physically disabled and (b) sensorily disabled people are employed in his Department; and what percentage they are of the total work force.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On 1 July 1992, 185 members of staff in the Home Office were registered disabled, representing 0·4 per cent of all staff. No record has been kept of staff's specific disabilities nor of staff with disabilities who have chosen not to register.

Drugs (Convictions)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of convictions against people for (i) dealing in and (ii) possessing hard drugs in (a) Pendle and (b) Lancashire for each year since 1987.

Mr. Jack: The information requested with respect to Lancashire for the misuse of all drugs controlled under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 is given in table A2.6 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Statistics of drugs seizures and offenders dealt with (area tables)", 1987-1991, copies of which are in the Library. Information with regard to the Pendle district is not held centrally.

Political Asylum

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for political asylum in Britain have been made from British embassies since January; and how many such applications have been successful.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information for 1992 is not available. For available information for 1991 and earlier years I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 9 November, columns 629-30.

EC Immigration Ministers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of EC ministers with responsibility for immigration held in London on 30 November.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 7 December 1992, Official Report, column 481, when I reported on the outcome of the Immigration Ministers' meeting on 30 November and Trevi Ministers' meeting on 1 December.

Convicted Teenagers

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in respect of each probation department, how many 17 to 21-year-olds are on alternative-to-custody programmes run by the probation service and or voluntary organisations following conviction for a criminal offence in each case on the last date for which information is available.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 4 December 1992]: The available information is shown in the table.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq

Mr. Hain: To ask the Prime Minister when he first became aware of the 1988 amendments to the 1985 Howe guidelines for defence-related exports to Iraq.

The Prime Minister: The development and application of the guidelines will be a matter for the Scott inquiry.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the total cost to the Exchequer of his travels within the European Communities to meet his counterparts since 1 July 1992.

The Prime Minister: The total cost is not yet available.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list by date all meetings and telephone conversations he has had with his European Community counterparts during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council.

The Prime Minister: I have had frequent contacts with my EC colleagues, most recently during a tour of EC capitals to prepare for the Edinburgh European Council.

Iraq and Iran

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to discuss arms and nuclear exports to Iraq and Iran from European Community countries during the European summit of the European Council.

The Prime Minister: We are committed to strengthening nuclear non-proliferation regimes and to controlling arms exports. The United Kingdom presidency has taken forward work on nuclear non-proliferation and on the harmonisation of conventional arms export policies in European political co-operation. We have no plans to discuss EC arms and nuclear exports to Iraq and Iran at the Edinburgh summit.

Legal Expenses

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister on what dates, in what circumstances and at what cost, contributions have been made, at public expense, towards the legal expenses of officers of Her Majesty's Government, officers of the House of Commons who are Members of the House, persons working in the private office of Ministers and accounting officers for Departments of state since 1979.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Thurrock (Mr. Mackinlay) on 3 December, Official Report, column 307.

WALES

South Glamorgan Health Authority

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many secretarial staff were assisting consultants in South Glamorgan health authority in (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) the first half of 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The requested information is not available centrally.

Unemployment Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the unemployment figures for (a) Wales and (b) Clwyd for men and for women and as a percentage for May 1979 and for the latest date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The earliest month for which data comparable with present coverage are available for local areas is June 1983. The seasonally adjusted series, consistent between 1979 and 1992, is produced only for Wales as a whole. All available unemployment figures can be accessed from the NOMIS database, by House of Commons Library staff.

Local Government Reorganisation and Education

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what considerations informed his decision in respect of whether to place in the Library the results of his consultation exercises in the case of (a) local government reorganisation and (b) "Choice and Diversity and the Education Bill".

Sir Wyn Roberts: Responses to the various consultative documents on local government reorganisation were placed in the Library of the House at the request of the local authority associations in Wales and others.

Our policy on the responses received in respect of the proposals contained in the Education White Paper "Choice and Diversity" was described in my reply of 26 November to the hon. Gentleman at column 794.

Youth Training

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he intends to improve the training within the youth training scheme.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Training and enterprise councils (TECs), which are responsible for the planning and delivery of youth training, operate under a performance-based contract. Each TEC has arrangements for quality assurance and has the flexibility to develop programmes to meet local needs.

Youth training is being made even more effective through the progressive extension of training credits which are designed to increase the motivation of young people, encourage more employers to train and promote an efficient training market.

Young People (Shotton)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many young people in the Shotton travel-to-work area are not in employment, not on a youth training scheme and not in full-time education.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In October 1992 there were 398 unemployed claimants aged between 16 and 18 years inclusive in the Shotton, Flint and Rhyl trave-to-work area. Information on other young people who are out of employment, not on a YT scheme nor in full-time education, is not available.

Assisted Area Status

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of when the review of assisted area status will be concluded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given on 2 December to the hon. Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) by my hon. Friend the Minister of Trade at columns 260-61.

Education (Choice and Diversity)

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many representations he has received on the White Paper, "Choice and Diversity and the Education Bill"; and how many representations were made from (a) local education authorities, (b) teaching organisations and (c) others;

(2) if he will list, with names and addresses, those organisations and individuals who submitted representations to him over the White Paper, "Choice and Diversity and the Education Bill".

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have received some 300 representations on the White Paper "Choice and Diversity". A list, setting out the details of 81 of these, has been placed in the Library of the House. The list includes local education authorities and teaching organisations but does not include those governing bodies, headteachers, teachers, parents and members of the public who responded. It would not be appropriate to list such respondents, some of whom may not wish their names to be disclosed.

The list does not include those organisations which responded to the separate consultations on special educational needs and the proposed transfer of responsibility for the development of Welsh language classroom materials to the Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales (Awdurdod Cwricwlwm ac Asesu Cymru).

Training

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he proposes to improve the delivery of training by Training and enterprise councils.

Sir Wyn Roberts: TECs operate under a performance-based contract with the Department. Each TEC has arrangements for quality assuring the delivery of training by its training providers. Each TEC's performance is reviewed by officials.

Dolphins

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of state for Wales what representations he has received concerning the welfare of dolphins in the Irish sea and specifically Cardigan bay; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Forty-eight representations have been received since November 1991 from a number of sources including members of this House, members of the public and conservation bodies. Forty-four were in relation to the issuing of a licence by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to Hamilton Oil to undertake exploratory drilling in Cardigan bay; the other four were in relation to the seismic survey that was carried out in the bay in September of this year by the British Geological Survey.

Railway Privatisation

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Rail concerning the privatisation of the rail industry in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend last met Sir Bob Reid on 7 September. They discussed a wide range of topics including privatisation.

Disabled Trainees

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps are taken by his Department to monitor the effectiveness of policies employed by training and enterprise councils concerning the placement of disabled trainees.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Training and enterprise councils are required to set out in their business plans what steps they intend to take to ensure that appropriate training is provided for people with disabilities. Each TEC's performance is reviewed by officials.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money was allocated as travel allowances to assist disabled trainees to take up training placements by each training and enterprise council in Wales in the latest year for which figures are available.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is not possible to identify separately the amount for travel allowances for disabled trainees. In negotiating budgets with training and enterprise councils (TECs) the Department takes account of travel costs for all trainees and the TECs are under a "best endeavours" obligation in their contract to provide support costs, including reasonable travelling allowances, for disabled trainees.

Tourism

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the total earnings from tourism in Wales in each year since 1981; and if he will break the figures down according to (a) earnings from United Kingdom staying visits, (b) overseas visitors and (c) day visitors.

Sir Wyn Roberts [pursuant to his reply, 19 October 1992, columns 132-33]: Unfortunately an incorrect figure was given, the correct answer is as follows: Estimates of expenditure by overnight visitors to Wales are given in the following table. Estimates of expenditure by day visitors are available only for the financial year ending on 31 March 1989 when an estimated £229 million was spent in Wales. (Source: The Leisure Day Visits survey 1988-89, conducted by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on behalf of the Department of Employment and the British Tourist Authority.)

[1]These estimates, derived from sample surveys and thus subject to potential random sampling errors, have been rounded to the nearest £5 million.

[2]Since 1989 information has been obtained from the United Kingdom Tourism Survey (UKTS), sponsored jointly by the statutory tourist boards from: England, Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales. It is not possible to make a direct comparison between the results of this latter survey and those of earlier surveys.

Residential and Nursing Homes

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many private residential and nursing homes have been repossessed in Wales in each of the last three years; and how many beds have been lost each year through such repossessions.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Urban Programme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been allocated to the urban programme for Wales for each of the last five years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Urban programme allocations for Wales for the last five years were:

	£ million
1988-89	24·6
1989-90	27·6
1990-91	32·6
1991-92	40·6
1992-93	31·4

Illegal Parking

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will convene a conference of police, county councillors, borough, district, community and town councillors to discuss ways of alleviating the ill effects of illegal itinerant encampments in the county of Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No. This would be a matter for Clwyd county council to consider.

Hearing-Impaired Children

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he intends to ensure that the special needs of children with hearing impairment but who have not been statemented are protected in the future (a) in local education authority schools and (b) in opted-out schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Governors of both local education authority and grant-maintained schools have a responsibility to use their best endeavours to secure that, if any pupil has special educational needs, provision is made to meet those needs. The national curriculum applies to all children, including those with hearing impairments, and schools' special needs provision will be subject to inspection under the new system of school inspections by registered inspectors.

Market Testing

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales to which of those of his Department's activities due to be market tested by 30 September 1993, the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/EEC will apply.

Mr. David Hunt: Whether or not the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/EEC will apply to an individual case depends upon the facts of that case; and there are a number of tests to be applied. For example, it needs to be shown that an undertaking or part of an undertaking is actually being transferred.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a timetable showing when he plans to market test those activities listed for testing before 30 September 1993.

Mr. David Hunt: The timetable for market testing my departmental activities listed in Cmnd 2101 indicates my aim that the whole programme is complete by 30 September 1995.

Regional Enterprise Grants

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will start paying regional enterprise grants to companies based in intermediate areas in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: On 11 May the Minister for Industry announced the extension of the coverage of regional enterprise grants. In Wales, companies in intermediate areas have accordingly been invited to apply for grants. Parliamentary approval to this new service will be sought in a spring supplementary estimate 1992-93 for the agricultural support services, fishing, regional and industrial development, Wales vote (class XVI, vote 2). Pending that approval, and to ensure that projects can go ahead without delay, urgent expenditure estimated at £150,000 will be met by repayable advances for the contingencies fund.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Developing Countries

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what commitments have already been made out of the planned provision for aid to developing countries for 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The bulk of multilateral aid spending over the next three years will arise from existing commitments and developments in the EC budget expenditure on aid. Within individual bilateral aid programmes a range of commitments have already been entered into for spending over the next three years. Details of individual commitments could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Tibet

Mr. Begg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the People's Republic of China relating to policies on compulsory abortion and sterilisation of women; and birth control policy in Tibet; and what assistance is given to China's health and social services under bilateral aid programmes.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We regularly raise with the Chinese authorities our concern about the situation in Tibet and human rights abuses there including allegations of forced abortion. The Chinese authorities deny that forced abortion is official policy. Nevertheless there are reports that such practices occur in more isolated areas. Through the United Nations population fund (UNFPA) representations have been made to Chinese authorities about our concerns on these matters.

Our bilateral aid programme is focused on the environment, energy efficiency, economic reform and management, and public administration. We are not currently involved in either of the health or social services sectors.

Overseas Aid (Gross National Product)

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of gross national product was dedicated by the United Kingdom in overseas aid in the periods October 1990 to October 1991 and October 1991 to October 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Aid as a proportion of gross national product is calculated by calendar year. In 1990 the United Kingdom spent 0·27 per cent. of our GNP on overseas aid and in 1991 0·32 per cent.

Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in which regions of Somalia the United Nations Secretary-General has proposed the use of force to ensure delivery of emergency food aid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 7 December 1992]: United Nations Security Council resolution 794 permits the use of all necessary measures by member states throughout Somalia. In practice, we expect use of force only to be necessary in those regions in the south and centre of the country, where the delivery of emergency food aid has been seriously impeded by looting and violence.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reaction Her Majesty's Government have made to the proposal of the United Nations Secretary-General for the use of force to deliver emergency food aid to Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 7 December 1992]: Increased security is the key to delivering relief to the starving in Somalia. We have therefore accepted the United Nations Secretary-General's judgment that a larger United Nations military operation by a coalition of member states is necessary to secure the delivery of emergency food aid. We co-sponsored United Nations Security Council resolution 794 of 3 December.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will request the United Nations Secretary-General to draw up proposals to enable leaders in the north of Somalia, Republic of Somaliland, to establish an effective system of administration and to consolidate the relative peace in that region.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 7 December 1992]: The strategy proposed by the United Nations Secretary-General in July 1992 by the United Nations Security Council, envisages the re-building of institutions and the consolidation of peace throughout Somalia. The United Nations purposes to pursue those objectives on a regional basis. The north-west is one of the regions identified by the Secretary-General. We hope that the implementation of Security Council resolution 794, adopted on 3 December, will create the conditions in Somalia, not only for improved humanitarian relief operations but for effective implementation of the United Nations's plan for rehabilitation and institution rebuilding throughout the country.

Bosnia-Herzegovina

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Nations humanitarian aid convoys have travelled to their destinations in Bosnia-Herzegovina from (a) Belgrade, (b) Split and (c) by air from other points of departure.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 7 December 1992]: Exact figures for how many convoys have travelled to their destinations in Bosnia-Herzegovina from various points of departure are not available from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees at present. However, there are 79 UNHCR trucks based at Belgrade with a capacity of 1,140 tonnes and 10 at Split with a capacity of 70 tonnes. A further 228 trucks with 2,343 tonnes capacity are based elsewhere in the former Yugoslavia. As of December, a total of 1,840 relief flights had been made, delivering 21,106 tonnes of humanitarian relief; all of these were to Sarajevo.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Pit Closures

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what estimate he has made of the total job loss throughout the economy consequent upon the pit closure programme he announced last week;

(2) what is his working assuption of the consequential effects on British Rail manpower and finances of the pit closure programme which he announced last week.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the knock-on effect of the closure of the 31 mines on employment in (a) transport, (b) the engineering industry, including belting etc., (c) other material suppliers, (d) the demand for electric power on base load, (e) the demand for consumer goods and (f) retail distribution; and if he will provide an approximate total for the total knock-on effect, including the second-round effects.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade by what formula he estimates the number of businesses which close consequent on the closure of a colliery.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set in hand a study to estimate the overall number of job losses in the mining and related industries and in the mining communities likely to arise in the event of all 31 pits being closed, as announced by him in his statement of 13 October.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 6 November 1992]: The Government's view of the employment consequences of pit closures is set out in the memorandum submitted to the Employment Select Committee of the House on 1 December 1992 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment. With the agreement of the Committee, a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Personal Protective Equipment

Mr. Dowd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's assessment of the likely effect of its regulations arising from the PPE directive on firms employing (a) more than 50 people and (b) fewer than 50 people; and what action his Department proposes in order to minimise the disadvantages to small businesses in particular, arising from the directive.

Mr. Leigh: The Personal Protective Equipment Directive (89/686/EEC) removes technical barriers to trade arising from national regulations by creating a single regulatory regime. All firms in the sector, regardless of size, will be able to take advantage of the opportunities offered by the new rules. To minimise the difficulties which smaller businesses may face, in preparing for introduction of the provisions of this directive, the Government have decided that a period of 12 months will be allowed under the United Kingdom regulations before it will be necessary for them fully to comply with the new requirements.

Mr. Dowd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations his Department has received concerning the EC directive on personal protective equipment; how these representations have affected his Department's policy on the directive; and what his Department estimates to be the average cost per employee of those businesses having to comply with the regulations.

Mr. Leigh: The Department has received many representations from industry and others on the Personal Protective Equipment (PPE) Directive (89/686/EEC). These views have been taken into account in the drafting of the United Kingdom regulations.

The Department has not been able to obtain the necessary information to determine compliance costs per employee for businesses affected by this directive, but these should be comparable with the costs of such businesses throughout the EC. United Kingdom businesses will have access to new markets as a result of this directive.

Package Holidays Directive

Mr. Fraser: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to lay regulations to implement the European Community package holidays directive.

Mr. Leigh: Regulations implementing the EC Directive on Package Travel, Package Holidays and Package Tours (90/314/EEC) were laid before Parliament on Monday 23 November. They were withdrawn in order to make a number of amendments to the drafting and re-laid on Tuesday 1 December. They will be subject to the affirmative resolution procedure.

999 Service

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the oral statement of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Technology of 27 November, Official Report, columns 1163-66, concerning the future of the 999 service, if he will investigate the technical feasibility of running the existing system of operator centres within a competitive system of telephone providers.

Mr. Leigh: Oftel has appointed independent consultants to advise on ways in which the current 999 arrangements might be improved in the light of the growing numbers of telecommunications operators. Once their report is complete, all the options will be reviewed by the parties concerned in the light of the consultants' findings. As I have made clear, the Government fully support the director general's commitment to ensuring that the quality of any new arrangements at least maintains, and preferably improves, the current high standard of 999 call handling arrangements.

Parcelforce and Red Star Parcels

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he is taking to ensure that management and employees of Parcelforce and Red Star Parcels are in a position to put together bids.

Mr. Leigh: As my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade anticipated in his statement to the House on 15 July, he has asked the Post Office Board to make available financial support to help Parcelforce management and employees in putting together a bid for the business, should they wish to do so, in competition with other potential bidders. Red Star Parcels is a division of the British Rail Parcels Group and questions arising from its privatisation are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Parcelforce

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when he expects to invite bids for Parcelforce;

(2) when he expects the privatisation of Parcelforce to be completed.

Mr. Leigh: The Government have not yet decided on the method and timing of the privatisation of Parcelforce. I can therefore forecast neither the launch date for the privatisation, nor when it is likely to be completed.

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the effect on employment of the privatisation of Parcelforce.

Mr. Leigh: The detailed work set in hand following my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade's announcement on 15 July of his intention to privatise Parcelforce will cover all matters relating to the sale.

Mr. Steel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to ensure that, in the event of the privatisation of Parcelforce, the future owner will make pension provisions for the employees which, when taken as a whole, will be no less favourable than those currently provided under the Post Office pension schemes.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 7 December 1992]: There is extensive experience of protecting the accrued rights of public sector employees on privatisation; the same diligence will apply to the sale of Parcelforce. A potential purchaser's plans for future pension provision will in addition be carefully scrutinised at the time bids are sought.

Powergen

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he will take to compel PowerGen to adhere to their previous commitment to retrofit 4,000 megawatts of capacity with flue gas desulphurisation technology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The retrofitting of 2GW of flue gas desulphurisation technology is already under way at PowerGen's Ratcliffe on Soar power station. PowerGen has also applied for consent under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 to fit a further 2GW at Ferrybridge C; I am considering this application. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has power to direct Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to require the fitting of FGD in a particular case if he considers it appropriate.

Manufacturing Plant and Development

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance he has given for new manufacturing plant and development to (a) United Kingdom-owned companies and (b) foreign-based companies for each year since 1979.

Mr. Salisbury: Complete information has not been recorded in the form and over the period requested. However, since 1979, the following amounts have been paid under regional selective assistance and, from November 1984, the revised regional development grant scheme, to United Kingdom and foreign-owned companies respectively towards projects involving new manufacturing plant in Great Britain:

£ million

	UK-owned companies	Foreign-owned companies
1979-80	7·6	16·1
1980-81	9·6	5·1
1981-82	11·5	4·6
1982-83	14·7	10·6
1983-84	15·0	11·1
1984-85	18·5	12·5
1985-86	53·1	17·2
1986-87	133·2	19·6
1987-88	154·5	40·0
1988-89	227·1	58·2
1989-90	162·0	54·0
1990-91	116·6	41·4
1991-92	54·6	61·4

Notes:

(1) Payments towards new manufacturing plant under the original Regional Development Grant scheme could only be included at disproportionate cost.

(2) Excludes payments towards, (i) new manufacturing plant under Section 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 and (ii) development.

Computer Games

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ask the Director General of Fair Trading to make an investigation into monopolistic behaviour by computer games manufacturers.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Investigation of anti-competitive practices or monopolistic behaviour is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading. The director general makes references to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission where he considers it appropriate.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Flatman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) physically disabled and (b) sensorily disabled people are employed in his Department; and what percentage they are of the total work force.

Mr. Eggar: On 1 July 1992, the latest date for which information is readily available, the Department (including its executive agencies and the former Department of Energy) employed the following number of disabled staff.

	Number of Staff with Disabilities[1]	Percentage of Total Workforce
Registered	122·5	1·0
Non Registered	56·5	0·5
Total	179·0	1·5

[1] Full time equivalents.

Of these, 47·5 staff (0·4 per cent. of the total workforce) were known to have a sensory disability. Separate figures for physical disability are unavailable.

The above figures cover only staff who have chosen to declare their disability.

Market Testing

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the President of the Board of Trade to which of those of his Department's activities due to be market tested by 30 September 1993, the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/EEC will apply.

Mr. Eggar: Whether or not the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/EEC will apply to an individual case depends on the facts of that case; and there are a number of tests to be applied. For example, it needs to be shown that an undertaking or part of an undertaking is actually being transferred. We are seeking the advice of our legal advisers on a case by case basis.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a timetable showing when he plans to market test those activities listed for testing before 30 September 1993.

Mr. Eggar: It is my intention to mount market tests before September 1993 on all my Department's activities listed in Cmnd 2101. I am not publishing a timetable since detailed planning is still underway in some areas.

Microsoft Corporation

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will (a) investigate the proposed supply and charging practices of the Microsoft Corporation for MS-DOS and (b) refer this to the Director General of Fair Trading.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Investigation of allegedly anti-competitive or monopolistic behaviour is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading. Allegations of such practices should be referred to his office for consideration.

Beer

Mr. Hardy: Top ask the President of the Board of Trade what account he has taken of the preparedness of the British glass-making industry for the proposed new requirements for beer measurement, in decisions on the timing of the introduction of the requirements.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 4 December 1992]: The British Glass Manufacturers Confederation was consulted in January 1992. Following consultation the implementation date was set at 1 April 1994 allowing a gradual transition and giving glass manufacturers time to prepare for the new requirement.

Post Office

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he was consulted by Post Office Counters over its planned new reorganisation and job reduction programme as part of his review of the Post Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 7 December 1992]: Internal management structure and levels of employment within Post Office Counters are operational matters for the Post Office Board. My Department was fully informed in advance about the proposed re-organisation of Post Office Counters. These operational matters do not form part of our current review of the Post Office.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Tourism

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) if he will make it his policy that support for regional tourist boards will not be cut as a result of the tourism review;

(2) for what reason grant in aid support for the tourism industry is to be reduced over the next three years.

Mr. Key: I refer to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn, Hatfield (Mr. Evans) on 13 November, Official Report, columns 997-98. I believe that the case is now much less strong for central Government funding of the promotion of tourism in England. The English Tourist Board (ETB) has done a great deal over the years to raise standards, to improve access to information, and to show the industry how their products can be developed and marketed. As the industry matures, and the regional tourist boards develop, it is appropriate for other bodies to carry on many of the ETB's central activities. That is reflected in the allocations of Exchequer grants for tourism over the next three years.

However, I also believe that central Government support for the regional tourist boards should continue. I believe that this support should be targeted much more closely than at present on areas of need where tourism might be an instrument of economic regeneration. The English Tourist Board is currently working on proposals for support to the regional tourist boards.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage for what reason tourism has been excluded from the list of recipients of financial benefits that will be provided by the national lottery.

Mr. Key: The White Paper, "A National Lottery Raising Money for Good Causes", stated that proceeds from the national lottery would be distributed for the arts, sport, heritage and charities. Funds devoted to improving the heritage, arts and sports sectors will also benefit tourism.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make it his policy to re-establish the post of tourism Minister, with responsibility only for tourism, within his Department.

Mr. Key: My Department brings together for the first time a number of inter-related portfolios, all of which are important to tourism. Both my right hon. Friend and I cover the whole range of the Department's activities, including tourism itself. The industry will benefit from having two Ministers, including one at Cabinet level, whose interests are directly relevant to tourism.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment has been made of the effect on the early summer tourist trade if the May day bank holiday were to be removed.

Mr. Key: There has been no direct assessment of this kind. However, the English Tourist Board (ETB) takes the view that the May day holiday is too close to the Easter and late spring bank holidays, and generates little extra tourism business. This view is backed by many sections of the tourism industry. The ETB considers that an autumn bank holiday would help to extend the tourist season and thereby promote greater employment opportunities.

Market Testing

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will publish a timetable showing when he plans to market-test those activities listed for testing before 30 September 1993.

Mr. Brooke: My Department intends that the market-testing of those activities listed in Cmnd 2101 will be complete by 30 September 1993 and planning is well under way. Tenders are currently being invited for the provision of office services in my Department's new headquarters building. Contracts will be in place before the move.

Tenders are currently being invited for building agent services for the royal parks with the intention that the managing contractor will be appointed by 1 April 1993 or shortly thereafter. The Historic Royal Palaces Agency will present a report to me on the market-testing of gardens maintenance by the end of this year.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage to which of those of his Department's activities due to be market-tested by 30 September 1993 the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC acquired rights directive 77/189/EEC will apply.

Mr. Brooke: My Department intends to contract out a number of its central services when it moves to its new headquarters. The Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations are unlikely to apply in this case as none of my Department's staff are currently engaged in providing these services. In relation to other activities due to be market-tested, my Department will seek legal advice on the relevance of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/EEC on a case by case basis.

Television Licences

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will announce the television licence fees which will take effect from 1 April 1993.

Mr. Brooke: On 14 January 1991, the then Secretary of State for the Home Department announced (Official Report, col. 377-78) that the fee increase for April 1991, which was set at 3 per cent. below the retail price index, would be followed by annual increases at RPI over the subsequent four years. The operation of this formula would, however, be reassessed in 1994.

Licence fee increases are based on the annual increase in RPI as at the preceding September, in the same way as rises in pensions and other state benefits. Application of this year's September RPI figure of 3·6 per cent. to the current unrounded fees produces new rounded totals of £83 for a colour licence and £27·50 for a monochrome licence. The necessary regulations to bring these fees into force next April will be laid before the House in due course.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what representations he has received about the workings of the concessionary television licence scheme as it affects Severn house, Worcester; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether the consultations on the future structure and funding of the BBC will include an examination of the concessionary television licence scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I have received representations about the workings of the concessionary television licence scheme as it affects Severn house, Worcester, only from the hon. Member. The concessionary scheme was the subject of long and careful scrutiny before the regulations were revised in 1988. The Government have repeatedly made it clear that they have no plans to amend or extend the regulations governing the scheme. The long-term future of the licence fee and the arrangements for paying it are issues to be considered in the debate about the renewal of the BBC's charter.

National Lottery

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of revenue to the Treasury from the proposed national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: I refer to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Hall) on 7 December 1992 (Official Report, column 456).

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the loss of revenue to the Treasury from the pools industry when the national lottery is introduced.

Mr. Brooke: I refer to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. O'Hara) on 7 December 1992 (Official Report, column 455).

Windsor Castle

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when English Heritage applied for access to inspect and survey rewiring and other works being carried out at Windsor castle; and what response was given on each occasion.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what information he has regarding applications by English Heritage to survey Windsor castle during the recent installations of new services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [holding answers 27 and 30 November 1992]: English Heritage works closely with the royal household and has carried out several inspections and surveys in the royal palaces over the past few years. English Heritage experts were not generally involved during the rewiring work at Windsor castle because it was judged that it did not involve significant disturbance to the fabric. However, they were notified on a number of occasions in the course of the work of possible disturbance to the historic fabric and were allowed access on all but one occasion.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the total cost would be of uprating the level of income support received by people aged 18 to 24 years to the level enjoyed by those of 25 years and over.

Mr. Burt: The estimated cost of increasing the rate of income support for 18 to 24-year-olds to that payable to those aged 25 and over is £360 million in a full year. This figure includes the consequential increases in housing benefit and community charge benefit.

Note:

The figure has been rounded to the nearest £5 million.

Source:

Modelled at 1992-93 prices and benefit levels using data drawn from the 1991 Annual Statistical Enquiry and the 1987-88-89 Family Expenditure Surveys.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much his Department is spending on publicity and promotion for the Child Support Agency in 1992-93.

Mr. Burt: The new child support scheme will make a substantial change to both existing law and practice in this area, substituting an administratively-based system for the current courts system. Publicity is being aimed at a wide audience among the public, lawyers and advisers, recognising the major scale of this change. The total publicity budget for 1992-93 is £4,012,000, including TV, radio and press advertisements, leaflets and other information material, distribution of leaflets through a handling house, training presentations to legal and lay advisers, and the launch of the Child Support Agency.

Disability Living Allowance

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the letter sent to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North dated 30 October by Michael Bichard, chief executive of the Benefits Agency, relating to the resources to be made available for the urgent processing of outstanding disability living allowance from constituents in Stoke-on-Trent, North.

Mr. Burt: A copy will be placed in the Library.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the current real value of the pensioners' Christmas bonus would be had it been upgraded in line with the retail prices index since the bonus introduction in 1972.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 19 October 1992 at column 176.

Occupational Diseases

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the report by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council on bladder and lung cancer in relation to aluminium smelting; and if he will make a statement on this and the council's earlier reports on work-related upper limb disorders (Cm 1936) and lung cancer in relation to occupational exposure to silica (Cm 2043).

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today laid before Parliament the council's report on bladder and lung cancer in relation to aluminium smelting (Cm 2104). We have accepted the council's recommendation that bladder cancer in relation to work in aluminium smelting involving the Soderberg process be added to the list of diseases prescribed for industrial disablement benefit purposes. The council found insufficient evidence to recommend that lung cancer in association with aluminium smelting be prescribed.

The Government also accept the council's recommendations in Cm 1936 and 2043 that both carpal tunnel syndrome associated with the use of hand-held vibrating tools, and lung cancer where there is accompanying evidence of silicosis in people in a prescribed list of occupations, be added to the list of prescribed diseases.

Regulations will be laid to implement the above recommendations from spring 1993.

The Government will be giving further consideration to the council's recommendation that other cases of carpal tunnel syndrome should be considered for benefit on a case by case basis.

Market Testing

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a timetable showing when he plans to market-test those activities listed for testing before 30 September 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: The timetable listed in Cm 2101 shows the main activities which the Department aims to market-test by 30 September 1993. We also aim to test printing, microfilming, travel, video production, storage and distribution, and publishing services. Planning is well under way. Each project is setting its own specific timetable for the main milestone stages within the overall programme.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to which of those of his Department's activities due to be market tested by 30 September 1993, the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/EEC will apply.

Miss Widdecombe: Whether or not the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 (TUPE) and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/EEC will apply to an individual case depends on the facts of that case; and there are a number of tests to be applied. For example, it needs to be shown that an undertaking or part of an undertaking is actually being transferred. We are seeking the advice of our legal advisers about the relevance of TUPE on a case by case basis.

Dependency Allowance

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to make it possible for a woman of pensionable age to claim a dependancy allowance for a man who is not.

Miss Widdecombe: It is already possible for a woman aged 60 or over to receive an increase of retirment pension for a husband who is under 65, provided she had entitlement to an increase of invalidity, sickness or unemployment benefit immediately prior to retirement. The Government will be looking at these rules in the context of their consideration of the equalisation of pension age.

Mrs. Jean Fox

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for South Hams, dated 22 October, about Mrs. Jean Fox of 6 Mapledene close, Stoke Gabriel, South Devon.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand that Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, replied to my hon. Friend on 1 December 1992.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Officers (Legal Expenses)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, on what dates, in what circumstances and at what cost, contributions have been made from public funds towards the legal expenses of Officers of the House of Commons since 1979.

Mr. Beith: None since September 1987. A search of records before that date could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost.

Portrait Restoration

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what is the estimated cost of restoring the damaged portrait of Lady Thatcher in 1 Parliament street; and when he expects it to be returned to the House.

Mr. Ray Powell: The damaged portrait of Lady Thatcher has been restored without charge. I am advised that it was rehung in the 1 Parliament street building this morning.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fishing Industry

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he approved the transfer of 50 tonnes of non-sector area VII hake to the Scottish Fishermen's Organisation; how he consulted the Northern Ireland Fish Producers' Organisation; what are the implications for the Northern Ireland fishing industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: It is not normal practice for quota swaps to be approved by Ministers. The Northern Ireland Fish Producers Organisation was not consulted as it was known that it did not have an allocation from which to offer the 500 tonnes of mackerel required to accommodate the needs of the mackerel handliners in the south west of England in return for hake. While the Northern Ireland industry would have benefited from an additional allocation of hake quota, the swap was approved in the overall interests of the non-sector fishery.

Newry Bypass

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of the current progress towards the completion of the Newry bypass, giving estimated start and completion dates for phases 2 and 3.

Mr. Atkins: The detailed design of stage 3 is well advanced. While the start dates will be dependant on the outcome of the current review of the Government's expenditure plans and the completion of the statutory processes, I hope to be in a position to make an early announcement.

Gamblers Anonymous

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial assistance has been made available by (a) the Department of Health and Social Services and (b) health boards, for Gamblers Anonymous in Northern Ireland; and what further funding arrangements are proposed.

Mr. Hanley: The Department of Health and Social Services provided grant aid of £250 to Gamblers Anonymous Belfast in the financial year 1987-88. The Department has no plans to provide further grant aid.

The Eastern health and social services board has provided grant aid to Gamblers Anonymous Belfast as follows:

Year	Amount paid £
1989-90	2,113
1990-91	10,170
1991-92	14,176

The Eastern board proposes to provide further grant aid of £80,250 in the current financial year.

The Northern, Southern and Western health and social services boards have not provided financial assistance to Gamblers Anonymous and have no plans to do so.

Market Testing

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a timetable showing when he plans to market-test those activities listed for testing before 30 September 1993.

Mr. Mates: The timetable for market testing the Northern Ireland activities listed in Cmd 2101 ensures that the whole programme will be completed by 30 September 1992. The market testing process is already well underway. The precise timing of the various steps in the process will vary from test to test.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to which of those of his Department's activities due to be market-tested by 30 September 1993, the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/EEC will apply.

Mr. Mates: Whether or not the Transfer of Undertakings Protection of Employment Regulations 1981 and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/EEC will apply to an individual case depends on the facts of that case; and there are a number of tests to be applied. For example, it needs to be shown that an undertaking or part of an undertaking is actually being transferred. Advice will be sought from our legal advisers about the relevance of TUPE on a case by case basis.

HEALTH

Complementary Medicine

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many complementary medical practitioners are now receiving NHS payment via the family health services authority as full members of the primary care team;

(2) if she will indicate the number of complementary therapists employed in (a) fund-holding general practitioner practices and (b) non-fund-holding general practitioner practices;

(3) what steps she will take to draw doctors' and family health service authorities' attention to the new possibilities raised by the announcement of 3 December 1991 allowing doctors to delegate responsibilities to practitioners of complementary medicine provided the doctor retained clinical charge of a patient.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. However, my hon. Friend will wish to know that it is open to all GPs to employ a wide range of staff including complementary therapists, where appropriate, to assist them in the provision of general medical services.

General practitioners are already aware that their terms of service allow them to employ a wide range of staff including complementary therapists. Family health services authorities who have management responsibility for the GP practice staff reimbursement scheme are similarly aware. The press release to which my hon. Friend refers simply clarified the existing position. We see no need therefore to issue further guidance.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what effects the proposed changes in health promotion clinic fee structure will have on counselling services in primary health care and on the availability of complementary therapies.

Mr. Sackville: It will remain open to practices, as now, to offer these services to patients if they so wish.

The arrangements for health promotion programmes, to be introduced from July 1993, will concentrate on action to address smoking, coronary heart disease and stroke. But there will also be transitional arrangements to help protect existing activity outside the scope of the main scheme, and we intend from 1994-95 to establish funding arrangements for action to address additional local priorities.

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to her answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 82, what is her Department's latest estimate of the annual shortfall between benefits and charges for residential or nursing care; and what account was taken of this in the announcement she made on 2 October concerning the funding of community care with effect from April 1993.

Mr. Yeo: As I said in my reply to the hon. Member on 30 November at column 82, the £140 million additional finance for community care above the £399 million transfer from social security will ensure that all authorities will be able to purchase appropriate care for people under their new responsibilities. Any difference that exists currently between the level of benefits and charges should be substantially reduced after April 1993 when authorities negotiate fee levels with care homes or provide non-residential services for people who could be better cared for at home.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to ensure Magnetic Resonance Imaging provision in all health authorities the size of North-Staffordshire.

Mr. Sackville: Magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) is a powerful imaging technique with the advantage that it does not involve ionising radiation. It has advantages over computerised tomography scanning in particular clinical situations but is expensive in terms of capital and running costs. Case-mix, amongst other things, will influence whether or not a provider unit will wish to have MRI facilities.

The national health service reforms as set out in the White Paper "Working for Patients" provide that hospitals and other units will be responsible for providing efficient and effective health services to meet the needs identified by health authorities. In this context, provider units will inevitably reach different decisions on whether MRI should form part of the services they provide.

Hospitals

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of hospitals in England in 1979, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Sackville: In 1979 there were 2,023 hospitals in England making activity returns, and in 1990-91 there were 1,578. Over the same period the number of hospital in-patient cases treated rose by an estimated 25 per cent. to 7·5 million finished consultant episodes in 1990-91. From 1991-92 returns refer to national health service trusts (which may comprise more than one unit) and district health authorities (covering all directly managed units) and data on the number of individual units are not available.

Care in the Community

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of expenditure required in Hyndburn during the first year of the transfer of funds for care in the community from the Department of Social Security to Lancashire county council's social services department.

Mr. Yeo: It is the responsibility of Lancashire county council to estimate the expenditure required in Lancashire for the first year of the community care reforms. The indicative special transitional grant allocation for Lancashire for 1993-94 is £20·07 million.

Pharmaceuticals (Cost)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of pharmaceuticals to hospitals, prescribing doctors and normal general practitioner prescription costs for the past five years; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Expenditure on drugs by the family health services (FHS) and health authorities in England is shown in the table. The FHS figures include the cost of prescriptions written by all family doctors.

£ million

	Family health services	Hospital and community health services	Total
1987-88	1,536	352	1,888
1988-89	1,744	380	2,124
1989-90	1,942	414	2,356
1990-91	2,080	460	2,540
1991-92	2,317	[1]—	—

[1] An equivalent figure for 1991-92 is not yet available.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many visits her Department officials have made to each regional health authority during the last 12 months; and how many visits each regional health authority chairman has made in that period to her Department.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the ambulance services which have applied for or have been granted status as self-governing trusts.

Dr. Mawhinney: Twenty four ambulance service units have been established as national health service trusts. They are as follows:

First wave

1. Northumbria Ambulance NHS Trust.
2. Lincolnshire Ambulance NHS Trust.
3. Norfolk Ambulance NHS Trust.
4. Cornwall Ambulance Service (part of Cornwall Community Healthcare Trust)

Second wave

5. Cleveland Ambulance NHS Trust.
6. South Yorkshire Metropolitan Ambulance and Paramedic Service NHS Trust.
7. Essex Ambulance Service NHS Trust.
8. Avon Ambulance Service NHS Trust.
9. Gloucestershire Ambulance Service NHS Trust.
10. Devon Ambulance Service NHS Trust.
11. Staffordshire Ambulance Service NHS Trust.
12. Mersey Regional Ambulance Service NHS Trust.

Third wave

13. Cumbria Ambulance Service NHS Trust.
14. Durham County Ambulance Service NHS Trust.
15. West Yorkshire Metropolitan Ambulance Service NHS Trust.
16. North Yorkshire Ambulance Service NHS Trust.
17. Humberside Ambulance Service NHS Trust.
18. Nottinghamshire Ambulance Service NHS Trust.
19. Bedfordshire and Hertfordshire Ambulance Service NHS Trust.
20. The Two Shires—Northampton and Buckinghamshire Ambulance NHS Trust.
21. Royal Berkshire Ambulance NHS Trust.
22. Dorset Ambulance Service NHS Trust.
23. Hampshire Ambulance Service NHS Trust.
24. Wiltshire Ambulance Service NHS Trust.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Renton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been saved annually by the national health service by the original selected list scheme on drugs; and what was the effect on the level of prescriptions in those catergories which were not on the selected list.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1985-86 the selected list scheme saved £75 million on the drugs bill. It is not possible to make meaningful estimates for subsequent years, or to measure changes in the level of prescriptions which can be directly attributed to the scheme. We believe however that significant savings continue to be made.

Market Testing

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a timetable showing when she plans to market-test those activities listed for testing before 30 September 1993.

Mr. Sackville: The activities to be market tested in the Department were listed in Cmd 2101. A timetable for market-testing these activities has been drawn up with the aim of making a recommendation on the outcome of each tender by 30 September 1993. The Department has already awarded contracts for office and building services at the Department's new building in London.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to which of those of her Department's activities due to be market tested by 30 September 1993, the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC acquired rights directive 77/189/EEC will apply.

Mr. Sackville: We will consider the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/EEC to the Department's market-testing programme on a case-by-case basis.

Asbestos

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing (a) asbestos-related deaths and (b) asbestos-related disorders, by region for each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as is available without incurring disproportionate cost as soon as possible.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list the chief executives of shadow trusts who have failed to become the chief executive in the subsequent self-governing trust;

(2) if she will list the chief executives of directly managed national health service units that have failed to be appointed to the post of chief executives in the subsequent shadow trust unit.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not held centrally. Chief executive appointments in shadow and operational national health service trusts are a matter for the chairman and non-executive directors of the trust concerned.

London Health Services

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make a statement on the age structure, gender breakdown and specialty mix of the 680 consultants who are identified in the Tomlinson report as surplus to requirements;

(2) if she will make a statement on the current merit award allocation to the 680 consultants identified by the Tomlinson report as surplus to requirements; what is the total amount of these awards; and how much of this sum will be transferred to primary care provision.

Dr. Mawhinney: The figure of 680 consultants mentioned in the report is Sir Bernard Tomlinson's estimate of the number of surplus consultant posts, if patient inflows to inner London hospitals reduce to the maximum extent projected. We are still considering the proposals in the report, and will announce our response, including the staffing implications, in the new year.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the funds allocated in the autumn statement for the implementation of the Tomlinson report proposals.

Dr. Mawhinney: We shall put forward our proposals for the future direction of London's health services, including the financial implications, in the new year.

GP Drug Budgets

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the total GP drug budget for 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and projected figure for 1992-93 and the proportion of that budget spent for all patients in relation to patient age by five-year intervals.

Dr. Mawhinney: Expenditure on drugs by the family health services in England amounted to £1,942 million in 1989-90, £2,080 million in 1990-91 and £2,317 million in 1991-92. The latest estimate for 1992-93 is £2,584 million. Information on the proportion of expenditure spent on patients in particular age groups is not available centrally.

Running Costs

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress she has made in achieving the target of a reduction of 1·5 per cent. in her Department's running costs for the present financial year, in the first half of this financial year; and what specifically has been saved, by what means and in what areas of her responsibility.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 1 December 1992]: All parts of the Department are required to contribute towards the target for increased efficiency through measures aimed at cash-releasing savings or improved productivity. These are taken into account at the outset when budget allocations are made at the start of each year. For 1992-93 the Department plans to achieve efficiency gains totalling 1·4 per cent. Taken with the 1·7 per cent. gains achieved last year this more than meets the average target of 1·5 per cent. each year. The planned savings this year are made up of £1·2 million on manpower, £1·8 million on non-manpower costs and £0·6 million on the London paybill as a result of the first phase of the relocation to Leeds of the National Health Service Management Executive. Further savings of £1·9 million are expected to be realised in 1992-93 (including on capital expenditure) through improved purchasing policies.

The Department's agencies (NHS Estates and the Medicines Control Agency) work to separate targets. These are monitored through the respective departmental boards and the latest quarterly reports for the agencies show that they are both on course to achieve their targets by the end of the year. The NHS Estates Agency is working to an efficiency target of 4 per cent. in 1992-93 through reductions in manpower costs, improvements in procurement and increased use of video-conferencing. The target for the Medicines Control Agency is to achieve increased productivity of 3 per cent.

SCOTLAND

Market-Testing

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a timetable showing when he plans to market-test those activities listed for testing before 30 September 1993.

Mr. Lang: I announced the 1992-93 market-testing programme for my Departments on 28 August 1992. The market-testing of all 26 activities is due to be complete by 30 September 1993. The time taken to complete the market test will vary depending on the value of and complexity of the activity under consideration. Testing is now under way on several activities, including pay, leave and superannuation functions and the Scottish prison service works and store.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to which of those of his Department's activities due to be market-tested by 30 September 1993, the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC acquired knights directive 77/189/EEC will apply.

Mr. Lang: This will be determined for each activity in the light of the facts of the case and after considering legal advice.

Waivers of Disqualification

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many waivers of disqualification have been granted; and how many have been refused, for employees and trustees of charities since part 1 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1990 came into force on 27 July.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No waivers of disqualification have been granted and no waivers have been refused for employees and trustees of charities since the coming into force of the Act on 27 July.

EDUCATION

Market Testing

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a timetable showing when he plans to market-test those activities listed for testing before 30 September 1993.

Mr. Forman: Work has already begun on each of the Department's areas for market testing listed in Cmnd 2101, with a view to completing the programme by 30 September 1993. In the largest test, that of support services in the Department's headquarters, the work of developing specifications and shortlisting potential contractors is well advanced.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education to which of those of his Department's activities due to be market-tested by 30 September 1993 the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/EEC will apply.

Mr. Forman: The relevance of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations and the Acquired Rights Directive to an area of work being market tested depends upon the facts of each case, since there are a number of factors to be taken into account. The Department will be taking legal advice on the application of the regulations for each of the areas to be market tested by 30 September 1993.

School Examination Results

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many secondary schools were entered in the recently published schools' examinations results tables; how many entries were incorrect and for what reason; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: A total of 4,622 schools were included in the school performance tables published on 18 November. All complaints of incorrect figures are being investigated on a case by case basis. To date, the entries for some 16 schools have been found to be incorrect due to error on the part of the Department or its contractor. In all these cases, erratum slips are being issued and letters of apology sent to the schools concerned.

Administration Costs

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much in real terms his Department spent centrally on general administration in the last three years for which figures are available; what proportion of the total budget these figures represented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The figures are based on those set in table 1 of the departmental report, published in February this year (Cm 1911), and revalued to 1991-92 financial year prices. The figures are rounded to the nearest £1 million.

£ million

	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Administration, research and miscellaneous services	87	91	107
Total Department of Education and Science	6,659	7,102	7,345
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
Administration expressed as a percentage of total	1·3	1·3	1·4

The figures include expenditure on civil science; responsibility for this work was transferred to the Office of Science and Technology on 6 July 1992.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) physically disabled and (b) sensorily disabled people are employed in his Department; and what percentage they are of the total work force.

Mr. Forman: The Department, including the Teachers Pensions Agency, has 69 staff (3 per cent. of the work force) who are registered disabled. This includes 19 (0·8 per cent.) with sensory disabilities and 30 (1·3 per cent.) with physical disabilities. There are other staff in the Department with disabilities who have chosen not to register and who are not included in the above figures.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools have declined to opt for grant-maintained status following ballots.

Mr. Forth: Of the 779 ballots for grant-maintained status which have been held to date, 172 (22 per cent.) have resulted in a vote against applying for grant-maintained status. Once a school has balloted in favour of applying for grant-maintained status, the governors have a statutory duty to proceed with the application by publishing proposals.

Education Courses (London)

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many courses of adult education were provided by the Inner London education authority at the time of its abolition; and what are the current corresponding figures for its successor authorities.

Mr. Forman: Information on the number of adult education courses is not collected by the Department, which collects only enrolment data from adult education centres.

Natural Medicines

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision there is in the curricula of Government-funded medical establishments for the teaching and theory and practice of the schools of natural medicine.

Mr. Forman: I have been asked to reply.

It is for universities to determine the curriculum for medical education in the light of recommendations from the General Medical Council. The GMC is considering changes to its current recommendations. Its intention is that medical students should in future have a range of options from which to choose for part of their course. It will be for institutions to decide their own curricula taking account of the GMC's revised criteria.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the recent survey into the operation of of grant-maintained schools undertaken by the grant-maintained schools centre.

Mr. Patten: A survey of 103 grant-maintained schools, undertaken by the grant-maintained schools centre, was published on 27 November 1992. The survey demonstrated clearly the benefits of grant-maintained status, which enables schools to manage their own affairs and gives them the flexibility to target funding at classroom level.

The main findings of the survey were as follows:

more than 80 per cent. of the schools that responded reported increased pupil numbers at the beginning of the school year 1992-93;

more than three-quarters of schools reported an increase in teaching staff; more than 90 per cent. of schools experienced no difficulty in recruiting or retaining governors;

57 per cent. of secondary comprehensive schools and 40 per cent. of primary schools reported an increase in their provision for Special Needs.

Copies of the survey are available in the Library.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Members' Pay

Mr. Page: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects to bring forward a resolution on the pay of hon. Members, as referred to in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement.

Mr. Newton: The resolution on Members' Salaries was debated and approved by the House on Wednesday 25 November.

Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration Select Committee

Dr. Wright: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects to present nominations for the Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

Mr. Newton: Nominations for the Select Committee on Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration were approved on Wednesday 2 December.

TRANSPORT

Supply Vessels (Foreign Crews)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance his Department intends issuing to operators on the use of foreign crews on North sea supply vessels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Department is proposing to establish a consultation group of offshore supply vessels, including representatives of shipowners, operators, unions and the Health and Safety Executive. Matters to be considered by the group are likely to include a code of practice for operators covering manning, among other matters.

Motorways

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress in the implementation of changes in motorway planning policy in relation to increasing the number of refreshment facilities.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Following a commitment in the citizens charter, we announced a new policy on the provision of motorway services on 6 August. Under the new arrangements it is for the private sector rather than the Department of Transport to identify sites for motorway service areas, seek planning permission and acquire the land. The Department has since received a number of approaches from commercial organisations interested in the opportunities generated by the new policy and we hope that these will develop into firm proposals in due course.

Market Testing

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a timetable showing when he plans to market test those activities listed for testing before 30 September 1993.

Mr. Norris: The timetable for market testing my Department's activities listed in Cmnd 21001 provides for the programme to be substantially completed by 30 September 1993. The activities to be tested are diverse and separate timetables are being prepared for each case. In the case of the Register of Shipping and Seamen, tenders are due to be invited in April 1993 and contracts let in September 1993.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to which of those of his Department's activities due to be market tested by 30 September 1993, the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/EEC will apply.

Mr. Norris: The application of TUPE and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/89/EEC will depend on the particular circumstances of each market testing case, and specific legal advice will be sought in each case.

Conservation

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he intends to take to guard against the degradation of sites of special scientific interest and other areas requiring special conservation measures under the EC directive on the conservation of natural habitats and of wild fauna and flora, in the planning of new road networks including motorways.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Our long-established policy is that our road schemes should avoid protected areas wherever possible. We consult English Nature as individual proposals are developed and publish a comprehensive environmental assessment. Special measures to protect sites or relocate species may be agreed with English Nature.

We are already considering the implications of the EC Habitats Directive in the planning of our schemes and will observe its provisions when it is implemented.

Disabled People

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received the annual report of the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have received the sixth annual report of the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

The report makes a number of detailed recommendations on three principal subjects; the introduction of basic that are more easily accessible to disabled people, the need for further improvements in the pedestrian environment to remove obstacles to mobility and the need for more effective education and training on mobility issues as part of vocational and other qualifications within the transport industries.

The committee's recommendations are being studied in detail and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has already been in touch with the committee about them.

Bus Operators (Investigations)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will say how many bus operators are currently under investigation by the traffic commissioners; and if he will give in each case the commencement date of the investigation.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

British Rail (Capital Spending)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement for each main part of British Rail on the levels of capital spending necessary to maintain the capital stock and to avoid a deterioration of services.

Mr. Freeman: The distribution of capital and management resources amongst the different businesses of British Rail is a matter for the board. The additional funds announced for British Rail in the autumn statement will permit the board's total investment to continue at a level considerably higher in real terms than in the 1970s and 1980s.

Mercantile Marine (Manpower)

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are being taken to restore manpower levels within the British mercantile marine.

Mr. Norris: It is for the industry to determine its manpower needs. The Government are encouraging school leavers to join the Merchant Navy by providing financial support for the training of British crews and crew relief. The availability of crewing to meet defence needs is being further reviewed.

Since the Merchant Shipping (Safe Manning Document) Regulations came into force on 28 July 1992 my Department has specified the minimum complement on all British registered ships of 500 gross tonnes and over.

Ilkley Bypass

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the preferred route for the proposed A65 Ilkley bypass.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I hope to be able to do so very shortly.

Rail Services

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what action he has taken in response to the 1991 annual report of the Transport Users' Consultative Committee for Scotland; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his policy on the circumstances in which it is appropriate for the Government to intervene in the provision of rail services to rural communities;

(3) what assessment he has made of the effect of the decision to eliminate the rail service from Carstairs to Edinburgh in 1991 on the economy of the rural community of Clydesdale; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what action he has taken in response to the recommendation of the Transport Users' Consultative Committee for Scotland in its annual report that some InterCity trains should stop at Carstairs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I take note of the views, reports and other representations of all Transport Users' Consultative committees. However, the precise level of service offered on individual lines is a matter for the British Railways Board to consider.

British Rail's InterCity business is required to operate on a commercial basis, just like its competitors. To do so, it must make the best use of available resources by tailoring its services to meet market circumstances. Uneconomic but socially necessary passenger services, where there is clear need for them, are provided by British Rail's regional railways sector. The Government provide substantial financial support through PSO grant towards the cost of such services. However, PSO is paid as a block grant to British Rail, and it is for it to allocate it on a line by line basis. Subsidy is not dependent on public ownership of the railways and we have made it clear that we intend to continue to provide subsidy where it is required following implementation of our privatisation proposals.

Greater Manchester Buses

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assurances were given to GM Buses and trade unions representing the work force of GM Buses about Government support for an employee buyout prior to 23 November.

Mr. Freeman: It has been made clear to the PTA, GMB and their work force that the Government are in favour of employee participation in companies, and would be happy to see an employee buy-out. We have also made it clear since June this year that we expect all new sales of public transport companies to be by open competition and that we expect bids for buy-outs to be put forward on this basis. This applies to Greater Manchester Buses, and the new smaller companies that are to be formed from it.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) physically disabled and (b) sensorily disabled people are employed in his Department; and what percentage they are of the total work force.

Mr. Freeman: The Department of Transport and its agencies had recorded 201 registered disabled staff at 1 July 1992, representing 1·3 per cent. of the total work force. Of these 170 were registered as physically disabled and 31 sensorily disabled.

Nuclear Material (Transport)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to licence the channel tunnel for the transportation of plutonium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for the concessionaire's commercial judgment. Eurotunnel has said that it does not intend to permit the transport of nuclear material through the channel tunnel.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what account he has taken of the recommendations contained in the report for the European Parliament's Committee on the Environment, Public Health and Consumer Protection, on the environmental and public health aspects of the storage, transport and reprocessing of spent nuclear fuels and plutonium, dated October 1992.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 7 December 1992]: None.

The report is still in draft form, awaiting comments from the European Parliament.

Parking Offences

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will bring forward proposals for changes in the law to allow all local highways authorities to issue penalty charge notices for parking offences on the lines of the current system in London boroughs.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The necessary legislation is already in place. Section 43 of the Road Traffic Act 1991 enables new arrangements for parking enforcement, similar to those currently being introduced in London under sections 63-79 of the Act, to be extended by order to other areas. Preparations for the introduction of the new arrangements in London are well advanced, but we do not expect any of the London boroughs to be in a position to begin operating them before April next year at the earliest. In accordance with undertakings given during the passage of the Bill, we do not propose to make the new powers available generally until some experience has been gained of their operation in London.

Rail Franchises

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has decided which British Rail routes to include in the first passenger franchises; and whether this group will include the east coast main line.

Mr. Freeman: No decisions have yet been taken on which passenger rail services will be the first to be offered for franchising. We hope to take a decision on this shortly, taking into account the responses we have received to our consultation document on franchising, published in October.

Motor Cars

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce a 100 bhp limit on motor cars sold in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 8 December 1992]: I have no plans to introduce a power limit on motor cars.

Motor Cycles

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Government will oppose the Commission's proposal to impose a 74 kW/100 bhp power limit on all motor cycles sold in the EC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 8 December 1992]: The Government have made clear their view that the statistical evidence in support of the Commission's proposal is not entirely conclusive; but this is in order to encourage safe motor cycling and I believe this is a matter for qualified majority voting, we have decided not to stand in the way of the unanimous desire of other member states. We have therefore said that we would be prepared to accept the proposal. The EC Council of Ministers is currently awaiting the opinion on first reading of the European Parliament.

Traffic Calming, Rutland

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will grant permission for Rutland to become an accepted area for the implementation of experimental traffic-calming measures.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 8 December 1992]: Traffic calming is a relatively new approach to improving safety and environmental conditions. The Traffic Calming Act 1992 clarified the powers of highway authorities to undertake such works. We aim to bring forward regulations soon, covering a range of the better-known techniques. Where a highway authority wishes to use a measure not covered by regulations or clearly enabled under other legislation, it is open to that authority to seek a special authorisation from the Department.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Value Added Tax

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements have been agreed for the payment of VAT on exports under the single market.

Sir John Cope: Payment of VAT on goods despatched from the United Kingdom to other member states will not normally be required under single market arrangements.

Sales in such circumstances may be zero-rate provided that the supplier quotes the customer's VAT number on the sales invoice and holds satisfactory commercial evidence of removal of the goods from the United Kingdom. If the customer is not VAT registered, VAT will be chargeable in the United Kingdom unless the supplier is required to account for VAT in the member state of destination under distance selling arrangements such as mail order. Customs and Excise will be issuing more detailed guidance very shortly.

Exports to countries outside the European Community will continue to be zero-rated as at present.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many VAT registered traders were penalised for late payment of VAT in each of the last eight quarters; and how much the Exchequer received in fines resulting from this.

Sir John Cope: The number of VAT registered taxpayers surcharged in the last eight quarters for which figures are available are as follows:

	Number of taxpayers surcharged
1 November 1991 to 31 January 1992	36,457
1 December 1991 to 29 February 1992	36,934
1 January to 31 March 1992	31,261
1 February to 30 April 1992	37,691
1 March to 31 May 1992	37,090
1 April to 30 June 1992	37,093
1 May to 31 July 1992	37,021
1 June to 31 August 1992	36,930

The total amount of surcharge payments received during the same period is approximately £51·2 million. This figure will include payments of some surcharge assessments issued prior to 1 November 1991.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of how the administration of the transitional value added tax system from 1 January will affect subscription sales of magazines in EC member states (a) to customers who are not registered for value added tax, (b) to customers who are registered for value added tax, (c) if sales in the country of destination are over 35,000 ecu and (d) if sales to the country of destination are over 100,000 ecu.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 7 December 1992]: After 1 January 1993, the tax treatment of goods supplied by VAT-registered traders to customers in other member states under the distance selling arrangements—for example by mail order—will be dependent on thresholds. Each member state has the choice of adopting a threshold of either 35,000 ecu or 100,000 ecu. If sales to a member state are beneath that member state's threshold, then VAT in the member state of origin is chargeable; in the case of supplies of magazines from the United Kingdom, this would be zero. If sales exceed the threshold laid down by a member state, then all sales to that member state are chargeable at the appropriate rate of VAT in that member state and the trader will need to be registered for VAT or appoint a tax representative in that member state. Supplies to VAT-registered traders in other member states can continue to be zero-rated on "export" if the VAT registration number of the consignee is shown on a tax invoice.

It is not possible to estimate centrally how subscription sales of magazines will be affected. At present VAT is payable in most member states but the amount paid is not known to us. In future, traders beneath the appropriate thresholds will benefit by being able to apply our zero rate. Traders above the thresholds will need to be registered in other member states. The effect of the new arrangements on individual traders will therefore depend on their turnover in each member state.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each of the last five years up to 30 November (a) total VAT registrations and (b) total new registrations.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 8 December 1992]: The information requested is as follows:

At 31 March	Total VAT registrations	Total new registrations
1988-89	1,623,866	234,666
1989-90	1,710,106	266,094
1990-91	1,745,097	217,882
1991-92	1,677,829	194,070
[1]1992	1,643,679	124,371

[1]1 April to 30 November.

Figures from 1991 onwards reflect the effects of substantial increases in the registration and deregistration thresholds in the 1991 Budget.

Right to Buy

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assumptions lay behind the estimate of the number of right-to-buy sales over the next two years included in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement on 12 November.

Mr. Portillo: The estimate of capital receipts in the current financial year and in 1993-94 published in the autumn statement related to local authority asset sales generally in the United Kingdom; no specific figures were published for right-to-buy sales of council dwellings. The basis of the United Kingdom estimate was given in my written answer to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) on 20 November 1992 col. 418-19.

EC Budget

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what forecast the Government have made for the United Kingdom's net contribution per annum to the EC budget in each of the next seven years arising from the Government's current EC budget proposal to the EC Council;

(2) if he will make a statement on the reasons for proposed increases in the EC budget as a proportion of EC gross domestic product;

(3) what benefit he assesses will accrue to the United Kingdom from an expansion in the EC budget.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 7 December 1992]: The United Kingdom presidency tabled on 25 November a compromise proposal for negotiations on the future financing of the European Community; a copy has been placed in the Library. The implied annual addition to the United Kingdom's net public sector contribution arising from this proposal would be some £150 million in 1999 (at 1992 prices) above the forecast underlying cost of Community spending given the present ceiling on own resources, which would rise to £2,800 million in 1999 (at 1992 prices). The Government's aim is to achieve a settlement at Edinburgh which is affordable and consistent with the principles of budget discipline and sound public finance. Achieving agreement will assist progress on other issues, in particular enlargement.

ENVIRONMENT

Toxic Waste

18. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he intends to take to put into practice the agreements reached at Luxembourg on the treatment of toxic waste.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 3 December 1992 at column 288.

Council House Sales

19. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assumptions lay behind the estimate of the number of right-to-buy sales of council dwellings over the next two years published on 12 November.

Sir George Young: The estimate of capital receipts in my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement related to local authority asset sales generally in the United Kingdom; no specific figures were published for right-to-buy sales of council dwellings. The United Kingdom estimate was based on information about local authorities' recent asset sales and forecast outturn in the current year, taking account of the expected effect of the receipts measure announced in the autumn statement.

Council Tax

29. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals he expects against council tax valuations; and how many appeals he expects will be heard before 1 April 1993.

Mr. Redwood: It is fruitless to try to predict the number of appeals. As the final banding lists are not compiled until 1 April 1993, appeals are not possible before that date. However, anyone who wishes to correct a factual error in a draft list may approach the local listing officer, who will make any necessary amendments before 1 April.

31. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to ensure that local authorities set their council tax at an affordable level.

Mr. Redwood: I am confident that the vast majority of local authorities will play their part in setting affordable council taxes by setting sensible budgets. I have made clear that I shall not hesitate to use my capping powers to protect council tax payers if authorities fail to do so.

34. Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will introduce measures to reduce the level of council tax in those areas with an above-average proportion of houses in bands D and E.

Mr. Redwood: No. The council tax is a fair tax, which will take account of different individual circumstances and will be applied consistently across the country. The transitional reduction scheme will ensure that households in bands D and E will not face an increase of more than £2·50 and £2·75 a week respectively, if their councils spend at a reasonable level and have a good record on tax collection.

22. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what Government support is being provided to reduce the impact of the new council tax.

Mr. Robin Squire: We will be providing £340 million in transitional relief in 1993-94 to limit the initial increase between household community charge bills and the council tax.

Revenue Support Grant

20. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the assumptions behind the recent revenue support grant settlement for local authorities, which he announced on 26 November.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. and learned Friend gave a very full statement on 26 November. Consultation on his proposals for the settlement are now under way and he has nothing further to add at this stage.

South West Water (Capital Investment)

21. Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to reduce the level of capital investment required by South West Water as a result of European legislation.

Mr. Maclean: Our obligations for the time being under European Community legislation must be met, though we seek to ensure that it is done at the lowest cost to consumers. We consider that revisions of certain features of both the drinking water and bathing waters directives are overdue, and impose unnecessary costs on European consumers.

Ozone Depletion

23. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the extent of ozone level depletion in January 1992 over northern England; and if he will make a statement.

33. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the recent research findings relating to ozone depletion over the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: The results from measurement sites in Northern Europe and from satellites indicate that ozone levels in January 1992 were the lowest ever recorded at about 20 per cent. below the long-term January mean. This is outside the previously recorded range of natural variability. However, exceptional meteorological conditions involving the lowest surface pressure recorded this century, are thought to have contributed to low ozone levels. Results from succeeding spring months were within the range of long-term variation.

Local Government Structure

24. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he expects to have been made by the Local Government Commission in reviewing the structure of local government by the end of 1993.

Mr. Redwood: By the end of 1993 the Local Government Commission should have completed its reviews of local government structure, boundaries and electoral arrangements in the Isle of Wight, Derbyshire, and Cleveland and Durham; and have reached the final stage of its reviews of Avon, Gloucestershire and Somerset and Humberside, Lincolnshire and North Yorkshire. The Commission should also have begun some of the reviews in the second tranche of its work programme.

Nuclear Power

25. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which environmental groups he has met in the past year to discuss issues relating to the use of nuclear power in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: I met members of Greenpeace on 21 September and discussed a number of issues with them including ones relating to the use of nuclear power in the United Kingdom.

London Forum

26. Mr. Gerst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make a further statement about the London Forum.

Sir George Young: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to make a further announcement about the London Forum shortly.

Water Quality

27. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has as President of the Council of Ministers for the Environment to ensure a higher level of compliance by member states with EC directives applying to water quality.

Mr. Maclean: We wish to see the establishment of a small community inspectorate to audit the performance of national enforcement agencies; and the harmonisation of reporting methods under the Standardised Reporting Directive. During our presidency, we have successfully encouraged the formation of a network of environmental enforcement agencies to encourage exchange of information on enforcement practice.

Urban Areas (Regeneration)

28. Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to assist the regeneration of urban areas.

Mr. Redwood: The Government remain strongly committed to the regeneration of urban areas. We have provided over £90 million more resources for my Department's urban group of programmes than previously planned for 1993-94. This will allow full funding for each of the 31 successful city challenge areas next year as part of their £37·5 million five-year programme. It will also allow the urban development corporations to continue to develop their areas. The Urban Regeneration Agency will build on UDC experience in regenerating land for the benefit of urban areas. We have enabled local authorities to make greater use of capital receipts, backed by £20 million of capital partnership resources from the urban programme. Next year we will also be opening four new inner city task forces, in Birmingham, Plymouth, Stockton and Haringey.

Caravan Sites Act 1968

30. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what responses he has received to his Department's consultative proposals for reform of the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Clifton-Brown).

Council Rents

32. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes there have been in the average rent for (a) council houses and (b) council flats from 1979 to 1991 in England.

Sir George Young: My Department does not have separate estimates of average rents for local authority houses and flats. The estimated average weekly rents for council dwellings at April of each year in England from 1979 to 1991 are:

Year	£ per week at April
1979	6·41
1980	7·70
1981	11·42
1982	13·48
1983	13·97
1984	14·66
1985	15·54
1986	16·36
1987	17·70
1988	18·82
1989	20·70
1990	23·76
1991	27·28

The estimates for 1979 to 1990 are based on the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy's annual survey of local authority housing rents. The estimate for 1991 is derived from local authorities' housing revenue account subsidy claim form returns to the Department.

Integrated Pollution Control

35. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on integrated pollution control.

Mr. Maclean: The Government introduced comprehensive new controls on industrial pollution in the Environmental Protection Act 1990, part I of which requires operators of processes with the greatest potential for pollution to seek prior authorisation from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) under a system of integrated pollution control.

Integrated pollution control came into effect for all new processes on 1 April 1991, and the requirement for authorisation of existing processes will extend to all relevant industries by 1995. By the end of 1992-93 some 650 plants in 13 industrial groups will have become subject to IPC.

Housing Associations

38. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to hold discussions with the National Federation of Housing Associations on the future of housing associations.

Sir George Young: My colleagues are in frequent contact with the National Federation of Housing Associations and discuss a wide range of issues of concern to housing associations. I last met them on 12 November, but I have no immediate plans for future discussions.

Repossessed Homes

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will cause an investigation to be made by the Building Societies Commission or otherwise into the issue of insider rings of solicitors and estate agents manipulating the market in repossessed homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 30 November 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

Following recent press reports, the Director General of Fair Trading has commenced inquiries with a view to the possibility of taking action against individuals under the Estate Agents Act 1979. Under the Act the director general may in certain circumstances prohibit individuals from engaging further in estate agency work.

Alerce Timber (Seizure)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the Customs and Excise seizure of a quantity of alerce timber in Oxfordshire in May.

Sir John Cope: I have been asked to reply.

Customs and Excise seized a quantity of alerce timber banned from international trade under CITES—Conference on International Trade in Endangered Species. Decisions on whether to institute legal proceedings are a matter for the commissioners of Customs and Excise and I understand that the commissioners, on the basis of the evidence before them, do not feel that they would be justified in instituting criminal proceedings in this case. The timber is now held in safe storage and Customs are examining disposal options.

Local Authorities (Responsibilities)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the statutory responsibilities currently in force specifically for local authorities in Northumberland at (a) district level and (b) county level which were enacted in the last 30 years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The only relevant statute of which I am aware is the Northumberland County Council Act 1970, in so far as it has not been repealed by the Tyne and Wear County Council Acts of 1976 and 1980. The hon. Member may wish to contact Northumberland county council for the information he is seeking.

EC Environment Policy

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in achieving Her Majesty's Government's policy objectives for EC environmental protection policy during the presidency of the Council of Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The United Kingdom presidency has so far secured agreement to the regulation on the transboundary shipment of waste and made good progress on a number of other proposals. In addition we have highlighted the importance of integrating environmental concerns into other policy areas and carried forward work to follow up the Earth summit. We have secured a Commission commitment to report on implementation and enforcement of Community environmental legislation, and have established a network of EC environment enforcement authorities. We expect to make further progress on a number of proposals at the Environment Council on 15-16 December.

Flats Over Shops Initiative

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was (a) the number of applications received for the flats over shops initiative in England and Wales for 1991-92 and (b) the total value of these applications;

(2) how many flats have become available for rent in England and Wales as a result of the flats over shops initiative.

Sir George Young: A total of 210 local authorities in England applied for resources totalling over £41 million in the first year (1992-93) of the flats over shops scheme, of which 57 received supplementary credit approvals totalling £5,047,500. Should all these proceed to plan, then it is likely that the number of additional units of accommodation raised will be in the region of 400. In addition, the Housing Corporation has a programme of its own. A number of other bodies—including some retailers—are seeking to bring vacant space above shops back into use, partly stimulated by the Government's initiative. Separate arrangements, which are not directly comparable, are operated in Wales by the Secretary of State for Wales.

Local Authority Receipts

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the total level of receipts likely to accrue to each local authority in England during the current financial year.

Mr. Robin Squire: Local authorities provide returns to the Department giving the capital receipts they received in 1991-92 and the receipts they are forecasting to receive in 1992-93. I have arranged for this information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has made of the amount of capital receipts likely to be released in the Hyndburn constituency during the calendar year 1993 and the financial year 1993-94 from the sale of council-owned dwellings under the right-to-buy legislation.

Sir George Young: Projections of likely future right-to-buy receipts are not made for individual local authority areas.

Abandoned Mines

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with the National Rivers Authority concerning flooding and polluted water leaking contamination into rivers and streams from abandoned mines and proposed abandoned mines, including dates of meetings and sites under discussion.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. Friend and I have referred to the topic from time to time in discussions with members of the National Rivers Authority's board, and there have been discussions and exchanges of information between my officials and those of the NRA. I expect these contacts to continue as we give further consideration to policy on this issue.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if she will seek to amend section 89 of the Water Resources Act 1991 to make owners of abandoned workings liable for prosecution.

Mr. Maclean: The recent Environment White Paper confirmed that the Government are considering the framework of legal responsibility for pollution from abandoned mines. This will include consideration of section 89 of the 1991 Act.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if she will list all abandoned mines known to cause water pollution problems.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not available centrally. The National Rivers Authority has been reviewing data on water pollution from abandoned mines, and I expect its assessment to be published within the next few months.

Domestic Water Meters

36. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals for legislation to regulate the installation of domestic water meters in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: No. It is a matter for each water company to decide whether to install water meters in the light of the circumstances in its area. Provisions governing the installation and positioning of water meters are contained in the Water Industry Act 1991 and the Water (Meters) Regulations 1988.

Cetaceans

37. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what he expects the pilot study he has commissioned into cetaceans in the channel to report.

Mr. Maclean: The results of this joint European proposal to carry out a major trans-boundary survey of cetaceans in the North sea, Kattegat, Skaggerak and the channel will help to identify important habitat areas for these species and potential threats to them. The survey will also aid Community states in fulfilling their international nature conservation obligations and the results will provide a basis for the development of an integrated management plan for the region.

Right to Buy

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the number of right-to-buy applications received and registered by each local authority in England for (a) the year ended September 1991 and (b) the year ended September 1992;

(2) what was the number of sales completed by each local authority in England under right to buy for (a) the year ended September 1991 and (b) the year ended September 1992.

Sir George Young: Information on right-to-buy applications and completed sales for each local authority in England is published in the quarterly publication "Local Housing Statistics". Estimates are for financial years, or parts of financial years. The July 1992 issue (No. 102) contains figures for the financial year 1990-91 (table 5B) and provisional information for 1991-92 (table 5A). Details for the first quarter of 1992-93 were given in table 5 of the October 1992 issue (No. 103). Updated information covering the first half of 1992-93 will be available in the new year. Corresponding estimates for the periods requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the proportion of (a) houses and (b) flats sold to sitting tenants in England and Wales which have been repurchased by English and Welsh local authorities under housing defects legislation for each year since 1982;

(2) how many (a) houses and (b) flats sold to sitting tenants under the right to buy have been repurchased by English local authorities under housing defects legislation for each year since 1982.

Sir George Young: In England 12,165 houses and flats have been repurchased under the legislation by local authorities, representing 1·1 per cent. of all sales by those local authorities under the right to buy to the end of June 1992. In Wales the corresponding figures are 467 and 0·5 per cent. The number of properties repurchased each year has been as follows:

	(a) Houses	(b) Flats
England:
1984-85	78	1
1985-86	2,342	16
1986-87	2,550	30
1987-88	2,006	35
1988-89	1,674	14
1989-90	1,258	7
1990-91	1,306	11
1991-92	834	3
Wales:
1984-85	—	—
1985-86	22	3
1986-87	90	—
1987-88	214	2
1988-89	63	1
1989-90	38	1
1990-91	17	1
1991-92	12	1

Source: Local authority returns

The available data on repurchases does not include the year in which the dwelling was purchased under the right to buy so it is not possible to calculate the proportions of each year's sales that have been repurchased.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) physically disabled and (b) sensorily disabled people are employed in his Department; and what percentage they are of the total work force.

Mr. Howard: The Department employs 97 disabled people and this represents some 1·5 per cent. of the non industrial work force. Of the 97 disabled people, we are aware of 25 who have a sensory disability.

County Archive Services

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the continuation of the county archive services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: In the context of the review of local government structure by the Local Government Commission we have received representations from the Society of Archivists, the Association of County Archivists, the National Council on Archives and the Royal Commission on Historic Manuscripts, as well as representations from other interested parties and members of the public.

Our policy guidance to the Commission highlights the need for it to consider arrangements for the maintenance and management of archives. Our objective is for local authorities to continue to develop local policies for the collection and preservation of archives, and for making them available for public inspection whilst maintaining the integrity of existing collections.

Building and Construction

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest assessment of the prospects for increased activity in the building and construction industry.

Sir George Young: The prospects for increased activity in the construction industry will have been boosted by the measures announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his autumn statement. The action to revive the housing market, the "window of opportunity" for use of local authority capital receipts, the changes in capital allowances and the protection of many key capital spending programmes will all help create work in the industry. Most important of all is the reduction in interest rates, which are now at their lowest level since January 1978. All that is needed now is a return of confidence, and that should begin to re-assert itself now that the Government have set out their strategy for growth.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to change the standard spending assessment calculation for under-fives from a population base to a provision base.

Mr. Robin Squire: Our proposals for the 1993-94 standard spending assessments do not include any amendment to the education SSA element for under-fives. However all representations on these proposals will be carefully considered before final decisions are reached.

Water

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the chairmen of water companies in England and Wales about water supply disconnections.

Mr. Maclean: Both Ministers and officials from time to time meet the chairmen of water companies and discuss matters of mutual interest, including disconnections. For example, this subject was raised briefly when Lord Strathclyde and I met the chairmen of the Water Services Association and the Water Companies' Association on 1 December 1992.

Housing

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new houses were completed in Essex for every year since 1979, broken down by local authority district and between private, local authority and housing association ownership management.

Mr. Baldry: Estimates of housebuilding completions by sector for each local authority area in Essex are shown in the publications "Local Housing Statistics" and "Housebuilding in England by Local Authority Areas 1980-89".

Figures for 1979 are in table 5 of the May 1980 edition (issue No. 53) of "Local Housing Statistics". Figures for 1980 to 1984 are in "Housebuilding in England by Local Authority Areas"; tables 1.1 to 1.5. Latest figures for 1985 to 1991 and the first half of 1992 are in tables 1(a) to 1(h) of the October 1992 edition (issue No. 103) of "Local Housing Statistics". Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Budget Allocations

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the budget allocations made to each region for city grant for each year from 1989-90 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1989-90 prices.

Mr. Robin Squire: City grant is a demand-led grant programme and not allocated on a regional basis. Details of the amount of city grant approved by region and financial year are listed.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the budget allocations made to each inner-city task force by his Department for each year from 1989-90 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1989-90 prices.

Mr. Squire: Responsibility for the task force unit transferred to my Department from the Department of Trade and Industry on 1 June 1992. The expenditure by each inner city task force for the period from 1989-90 to 1991-92 is set out in the following table.

Expenditure by task forces 1989-92

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what weight he gives to service-specific costs such as education inflation and social service provision inflation in calculating standard spending assessments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 7 December 1992]: Standard spending assessments are distributed according to general principles which best reflect the differences in the costs of providing a standard level of service between local authorities. Total standard spending and its division between services, takes account of a number of factors including service responsibilities, cost pressures and what the country can afford.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Market Testing

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to which of those of his Department's activities due to be market-tested by 30 September 1993 the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/EEC will apply.

Mr. Curry: Whether or not the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/EEC will apply to an individual case depends on the facts of that case; and there are a number of tests to be applied. For example, it needs to be shown that an undertaking or part of an undertaking is actually being transferred.

We are seeking the advice of our legal advisers about the relevance of TUPE on a case by case basis.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a timetable showing when he plans to market test those activities listed for testing before 30 September 1993.

Mr. Curry: The timetable set for market testing the Departmental activities listed in the citizens charter first report: 1992 (CM 2101) requires the whole programme to be completed by 30 September 1993.

Planning is well under way on individual market tests and it is anticipated that the first invitations to tender will be issued early in 1993.

Agri-environment Measures

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he intends to set priorities for the implementation of Agri-Environment Regulation (2078/92).

Mr. Curry: Our priorities, based on advice from Government agencies and others, include nitrate reduction measures where this is necessary to protect drinking water sources, reduction of livestock numbers where this will be environmentally beneficial, measures to increase the environmental benefits of set-aside, the encouragement of organic farming and the management of land for public access and recreation. Details of our proposals will be issued for consultation this winter. They are additional to the expansion of environmentally sensitive areas already under way.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the relationship between the agri-environment package and the implementation of the national sustainability plan.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is consulting widely on the scope of the United Kingdom's report to the Sustainable Development Commission. Our proposals for agri-environment measures, on which we will also consult widely, will reflect Government commitments on agriculture and the environment.

Potatoes

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to what extent his proposals on reorganisation of the Potato Marketing Board are affected by the most recent EC reform proposals for potato marketing.

Mr. Curry: I have made no proposals on reorganisation of the Potato Marketing Board. The EC proposals in their present form would require fundamental changes to the potato marketing scheme and the board's powers. The Agriculture Bill, currently in another place, contains enabling powers for the potato marketing scheme to be revoked, the Potato Marketing Board to be wound up and its assets transferred to a successor body or bodies. This flexibility does not exist in the European Communities Act which would otherwise have to be used to wind up the scheme and the board if the current EC proposals were agreed.

GATT

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the effect of the GATT round on the price of (a) beef and (b) milk within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: None. As the EC Commission has made clear, the agreement on agricultural issues reached with the United States in the context of the current GATT round is consistent with the reforms to CAP regimes agreed earlier this year.

Scrapie

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date officials of his Department and other invited persons will be meeting Dr. Narang.

Mr. Soames: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Ewes

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish figures showing the total number of breeding ewes within the less-favoured areas in England and Wales in each year since 1987.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is as follows:

Breeding Ewes within less favoured areas

	England and Wales (thousands)
1987	7,863
1988	8,163
1989	8,507
1990	8,696
1991	8,727

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what additional training veterinary surgeons will have to undertake in order to carry out the ante and post-mortem inspection proposed under the EC directive on slaughterhouses.

Mr. Soames: Ante and post-mortem inspections are already required under United Kingdom legislation. For meat going for intra-community trade the ante-mortem must be carried out by an official veterinary surgeon and the new rules extend this requirement to meat going for domestic consumption. In the United Kingdom post-mortem inspections will generally continue to be carried out by meat inspectors although in many other member states it is normally performed by a fully qualified veterinary surgeon.

The degree qualification obtained by every veterinary surgeon fully equips him or her to perform both ante and post-mortem inspections. In order to be designated by the Minister as an official veterinary surgeon in Great Britain a veterinary surgeon has to undertake a short course organised by the Department to bring him or her up to date with the latest United Kingdom and EC meat hygiene technology, legislation and practice.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider the desirability of linking grants for set-aside land in suitable locations in the upper and middle zones of river catchments, to a national scheme of grants for the construction of simple bunds and associated temporary sluices that would impound heavy natural run-off of water to avoid flooding.

Mr. Curry: Under domestic legislation, the Ministry makes grant aid available to the National Rivers Authority, local authorities and internal drainage boards in support of flood defence measures which are technically sound, economically worthwhile and environmentally acceptable. The rules for land set-aside under the new EC arable arrangements from autumn 1992 require the land to be kept in good agricultural condition during the set-aside period. It would be incompatible with this requirement to permit the construction of structures to prevent run-off on set-aside land.

DEFENCE

NATO Status of Forces Agreement

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress in the renegotiation with the German authorities of the supplementary agreement to the NATO status of forces agreement; when he expects the negotiations to be concluded; and when he expects a new agreement to come into force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The review of the supplementary agreement to the NATO status of forces agreement began in September 1991. Negotiations have progressed very well and are now nearing their final stage. Seven states, including the United Kingdom and Germany are parties to the agreement and it is not possible therefore to say exactly when negotiations will be completed.

Menwith Hill Station (Visit)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what official assistance was given to the new director of the National Security Agency in connection with his visit to Menwith Hill station on 26 September.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All arrangements in support of visits by senior US officials to Menwith Hill station are a matter for the US Department of Defence.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the visit by representatives of the Government to Menwith Hill station around 11 October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There was no visit to Menwith Hill station by representatives of the Government on or around 11 October.

Greenwich Hospital Trust

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last published accounts for Greenwich hospital trust; and when he will make available a copy of the next available accounts.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Greenwich hospital's accounts for 1990-91 were ordered to be printed on 23 January 1992 and published accordingly by HMSO as House of Commons paper No. 203 of 1991-92. The 1991-92 accounts are nearing completion with a view to presentation to the House early in 1993.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the appointment of Hunters to act as agents for Greenwich hospital trust was subject to competitive tendering; and when the contract was last put out to tender.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. In 1968, Mr. D. C. Hunter, FRICS, was, with Admiralty Board approval, appointed manager of the hospital's Greenwich estate. In 1986, with the approval of the Greenwich hospital advisory panel, the appointment was transferred to Mr. Hunter's firm, Hunters, for a three-year trial period, with Mr. Hunter retaining responsibility for overall supervision of Greenwich hospital's interests. Although Mr. Hunter formally retired in 1989, he continues to act as a consultant to the firm. After the end of the trial period, the arrangement was reviewed and it was decided that existing contractual arrangements should continue.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation was undertaken with commercial tenants of Greenwich hospital trust about the appointment of the trust's agents to handle matters relating to the commercial leases held for the trust.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Available records do not indicate whether such consultation was undertaken. It is not normal commercial practice for a landlord to consult tenants before appointing an agent.

Windsor Castle (Fire)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the deployment of military personnel at Windsor castle following the recent fire; what charges are being made for the cost of those services; and by whom they will be met.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the fire and the immediate aftermath, in addition to men from the Windsor castle guard, some 200 soldiers from the Household Cavalry regiment were deployed to assist in removal of precious artifacts to a place of safety. Once the fire had been extinguished, soldiers assisted with the transfer of the previously removed objects back to their proper locations. During the period when members of the castle guard were providing assistance, the guard was reinforced with men from the 7th Duke of Edinburgh's Own Gurkha Rifles. Apart from charges which are being raised to cover the cost of meals provided for firemen at Combermere barracks, no charges are being raised for this assistance.

Amalgamations

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out details of amalgamations or disbandments of combat arms units of the Army which have taken place during 1992, giving dates, the units affected and the titles of regiments formed by amalgamations; and if he will set out the timetable for future amalgamations or disbandments of combat arms units.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the tables.

Military Aid

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the value of military aid supplied to overseas countries in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence has no military aid budget. The primary responsibility for funding military training assistance and other forms of aid lies with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and MOD assists where it is compatible with defence interests. The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Liquid Radioactive Waste

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much liquid radioactive waste was dealt with annually since 1962 by the present liquid radioactive waste treatment plant at AWE Aldermaston.

Mr. Aitken: The volumes, in cubic metres, are as follows:

Year	Volume

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the nuclear weapons in the United Kingdom's active stockpile were declared one-point safe.

Mr. Aitken: Each design of nuclear weapon in the United Kingdom's active stockpile was declared one-point safe before entering service.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in the establishment of a nuclear weapons safety group by his Department on the lines proposed in the Oxburgh report.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 6 November at column 532.

Helicopter Noise

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what plans there are to extend the helicopter noise insulation grant scheme to include dwellings which are on regular helicopter flight paths;

(2) what progress has been made on the review of the helicopter noise insulation grant scheme; and when he intends to reform the scheme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A study is underway to establish whether the boundary of the existing noise scheme at Bessbrook should be extended in some areas to take into account the intensity of noise created by helicopters on approach and departure routes. The study is being conducted in close consultation with Newry and Mourne district council and we would expect the results to be available around mid-1993. If these show that additional properties are subject to the qualifying noise levels for sound insulation grant we will consider extending entitlement to those areas and, if appropriate, review the implications for other helicopter landing sites in Northern Ireland. We have no plans to introduce schemes other than in the vicinity of helicopter landing sites.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to including individual dwellings in the vicinity of look-out posts and occasional helicopter landing sites within the helicopter noise insulation grant scheme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At look out posts and occasional helicopter landing sites the average 70dB(A) noise contour upon which our existing scheme is based would not be triggered from the small number of flights involved. It is not therefore proposed to include these sites in our scheme.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what monitoring of helicopter noise and flight frequencies has been carried out, and at what locations, as part of the review of the helicopter noise insulation grant scheme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A pilot noise survey including a daily check of flight movements at Bessbrook, which we believe is the worst affected area, has already commenced and is continuing. Our efforts will be concentrated there until data from this task and a subsequent full noise survey have been collected and analysed.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the current review of the helicopter noise insulation grant scheme was initiated.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: April 1991.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the high incidence of night-time helicopter flights in parts of Northern Ireland during the review of the helicopter noise insulation grant scheme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is because of our concern about the number of night-time helicopter flights in certain parts of Northern Ireland that this aspect forms an important part of our review.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to introducing helicopter noise insulation schemes at landing sites excluded from the last such grant scheme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We will consider the inclusion of other helicopter landing sites in Northern Ireland when the results of the noise survey at Bessbrook have been evaluated and the review of our night-time policy is complete.

Market Testing

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a timetable showing when he plans to market-test those activities listed for testing before 30 September 1993.

Mr. Aitken: The table gives the information the hon. Gentleman requests for significant activities to be tested in this timescale. It should be noted that the planning dates given are indicative only, as the length of the consultation period and the negotiations which follow are not easy to predict in each case.

Main activities to be tested by 30 September 1993

	Estimated completion date
Accommodation and office services	Property management (completed August 1992)
	Others March and September 1993
Elementary Flying Training	January 1993

	30 July 1993 (18 Base Workshop)
	Helicopter and aircraft support—RNAS Yeovilton (completed)
Fire services	31 August 1993
Freight delivery	BAOR freight services (completed)
	31 August 1993 Military container service
Grounds maintenance	September 1993
Information Technology services	February 1993
Motor Transport	July 1993
In-service equipment support	May 1993 (Trident in-service support)
	March 1993 Flight checking
Nuclear weapon research and production facilities	April 1993
Operation of experimental aircraft fleet	September 1993
Vehicle maintenance	May 1993

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to which of those of his Department's activities due to be market-tested by 30 September 1993 the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/EEC will apply.

Mr. Aitken: Whether or not the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/EEC will apply to an individual case will depend on the facts of that case. There are a number of tests to be applied; for example, it needs to be shown that an undertaking or part of an undertaking is actually being transferred. We are seeking the advice of our legal advisers about the relevance of TUPE on a case by case basis.

Aircraft

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the development of a European maritime patrol aircraft.

Mr. Aitken: I understand that a number of European aircraft manufacturers, including British Aerospace, are conducting exploratory studies into a possible European maritime patrol aircraft. I would be happy to consider such an aircraft as a possible contender to meet our future requirements, were it to be available.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the United Kingdom will participate in the feasibility stage of the European future large aircraft.

Mr. Aitken: No. However, we will continue to follow developments on the project.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the United Kingdom's requirement for a replacement maritime patrol aircraft.

Mr. Aitken: My Department intends shortly to issue a request to industry for information, on possible means of upgrading the maritime patrol capability currently provided by the Nimrod MR2 aircraft. This will allow the identification of possible enhancements to, or replacements for, the present aircraft and their systems around the turn of the century. The responses to this request will enable my Department to assess possible solutions and establish which offers best value for money in meeting the requirement.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the need for the United Kingdom to acquire a replacement for the Hercules aircraft.

Mr. Aitken: My Department is currently assessing the need for a replacement for the Hercules aircraft against our future air transport requirements. It is out intention to procure any such replacement aircraft off-the-shelf.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the prospects for the European future large aircraft project following recent progress on the European fighter aircraft project.

Mr. Aitken: As my Department is not participating in the European future large aircraft project, we have made no assessment of its prospects following progress on EFA. We will, however, follow any developments.

Mr. A. J. Linehan

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps were taken under the civil service rules relating to business appointments in connection with approval of the recruitment of Mr. A. J. Linehan by Higgs and Hill Safety Consultants.

Mr. McLoughlin: Mr. Linehan did not apply to the executive under the normal civil service rules prior to this appointment as a non-executive director of Hinton and Higgs and the executive is in correspondence with him on the matter.

Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the cost of ACAS during each year since its creation; and what is the expected cost in (a) 1992 and (b) 1993.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is set out in the following table:

	Cost £ million[1]
(a) Historical costs
[2]1974-75	1·3
1975-76	3·4
1976-77	8·0

(b) Estimated costs:

[1] Total net costs of ACAS. Figures do not include the costs of the Certification Officer or of the Central Arbitration Committee.
[2] 2 September 1974 to 31 March 1975.

Figures for 1993-94 will be published in the Government's expenditure plans (Employment Department Group Report) early next year.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many conciliation officers have been employed by ACAS during each year since its creation; how many it employs now; and how many it expects to employ in 1993.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am told by the chairman of ACAS that all higher executive officers (HEOs) employed by the service in its regional organisation are nominated as conciliation officers under section 211(1) of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992, although not all are employed full-time on conciliation work. Records of the total number of HEOs employed are not available before 1983.

Year	Number of HEOs on operational work
1983	221
1984	216
1985	203
1986	204
1987	200
1988	190
1989	184
1990	185
1991	181
1992	191

The figures given are calculated on the average number of HEOs in post over the first half of the calendar year in question. This year it is estimated that 92 per cent. of all HEO operational time is being employed on conciliation. This proportion is expected to be higher in 1993.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the role of ACAS has changed since its foundation; and what further changes are proposed.

Mr. McLoughlin: Since its creation as an independent statutory body, by the Employment Protection Act 1975, there have been three main changes to the statutory role of ACAS. First, the provisions in the 1975 Act relating to ACAS's role in the determination of claims for trade union recognition were repealed by the Employment Act 1980. Secondly, ACAS's role in undertaking inquiries into questions concerning Wages Councils was ended by the Wages Act 1986. Thirdly, ACAS's role in seeking to promote the settlement of complaints without them having to be determined by an industrial tribunal has been extended by a variety of enactments.

As to the future, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 1 December, Official Report, columns 132-33, to my hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick). If there are to be any further changes, they will be made after consultation with the ACAS Council.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many and what percentage of ACAS conciliation officers have portable telephones and word processors; and what plans there are to increase these provisions.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am told by the chairman of ACAS that no portable telephones are in use by conciliation officers. Most conciliation officers have access to personal computers. Replacement of the service's current computing systems is scheduled for 1993.

Training

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people resident in the Hyndburn constituency are engaged on employment training and employment action; and what proportion they represent of the total number of eligible people.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not available. Information on the number of participants on employment training and employment action is not collected centrally below training and enterprise council level.

Pools Industry

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are employed in the pools industry.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is included in the estimates for sport and other recreational services, which do not separately identify the pools industry.

In June 1992 (the latest date for which information is available) there were 343,000 employees in employment in sport and other recreational services in Great Britain.

Vocational Training

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make it her policy to establish United Kingdom wide minimum standards for the provision of vocational training, including (a) maximum numbers of hours that trainees are allowed to work, (b) the proportion of time to be spent on off-the-job training, (c) the proportion of time to be spent on placement, (d) break entitlements, (e) holiday entitlement, (f) other paid or unpaid leave and (g) grievance and disciplinary procedures.

Mr. McLoughlin: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidelines have been produced by her Department to training and enterprise councils concerning the inclusion of statements relating to (a) the quality of the training provision and (b) equal opportunity statements within their operating agreements.

Mr. McLoughlin: Relations between training and enterprise councils and the Employment Department are governed by the TEC operating agreement. Under this agreement TECs are required to:

Contract only with training providers that obtain and maintain approved training organisation status under criteria published by the Secretary of State or under criteria that are agreed to be at least equivalent; and to use all reasonable endeavours to ensure equality of opportunity in respect of all their activities and to pass on this obligation to their training providers.

Each year, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State produces strategic guidance to support TECs in developing their plans. This sets out the strategic priorities that underpin the operating agreement. These cover help for those at a disadvantage in the labour market and the provision of high quality training.

In addition, TECs have access to "Developing Good Practice" briefs on equal opportunities, managing quality and a wide range of other subjects.

PA Consulting Group

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money has been paid to PA Consulting Group in respect of contracts undertaken to (a) establish the feasibility of privatising the electrical equipment certification service and (b) undertake a pay and grading review for the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Executive paid PA Consulting Group £87,400 in the financial year 1991-92 for a study of the future status of the electrical equipment certification service.

The Health and Safety Executive appointed PA Consulting Group in March 1992 to assist in a review of pay and grading arrangements. A total of £79,400 has been paid to date.

Both contracts were awarded following competitive tendering exercises.

Hazard Ratings

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how occupational health factors are taken into account in determining the Health and Safety Executive's hazard rating system for the inspection of premises.

Mr. McLoughlin: When determining current health performance at inspection visits, to enable them to determine or review the inspection rating calculated, inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive's field operations division (FOD) take into account the action taken by employers, owners and the self employed to both identify risks to health and to prevent or control the risk so far as is reasonably practicable.

Field operations division is currently looking at new approaches to stimulate systematic collection of information on health risks further to refine the targeting of inspection visits planned on the basis of the rating system.

Employment Service

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress the Employment Service has made in the latest quarter in meeting targets outlined in the 1992-93 agency agreement; and if she will show for the latest possible date (a) the total unemployed job placings against profiled target, (b) the long-term unemployed job placings, (c) people with disabilities job placings, (d) inner-city job placings, (e) the employment training referral to the start ratio, (f) the number of new claims not pursued following initial contact and (g) the number of people who withdrew their claim to benefit after contact with fraud investigators.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am informed by the chief executive of the Employment Service that in the period April to September 1992, the Employment Service placed a total of 729,000 unemployed people into jobs, against an annual target of 1·425 million. 24·3 per cent. of these placings were long-term claimants, 2·8 per cent. were people with disabilities and 34 per cent. were unemployed people in inner cities against annual targets of 19 per cent., 2·5 per cent. and 36 per cent. respectively. Over the same period the employment training/employment action referral to start ratio was 2·8:1 against an annual target of 2·5:1. New claims not pursued following initial contact were at the annual target level of 10 per cent. The number of people who withdrew their claim to benefit after contact with fraud investigators was 35,000 against an annual target of 58,000.

Unemployment

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of those unemployed in the Accrington and Rossendale travel-to-work area have been out of work for more than 12 months.

Mr. McLoughlin: Unemployment figures by duration are available only on a quarterly basis. In October 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, 25·1 per cent. of unemployed people in the Accrington and Rossendale travel-to-work-area had been unemployed for over 12 months.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list by county the number and percentage of long-term unemployed for each year since 1984; and if she will indicate the percentage increase or decrease for each county.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the areas of the south-east region which are considered as long-term unemployment black spots; and what actions she proposes to take to help these areas.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is departmental policy to target assistance for the long term unemployed at individual people. In November, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced that next year help on Government employment and training programmes for unemployed people is being increased by nearly £500,000 to almost £1·5 million. New jobplan workshops will offer guidance and assessment for 300,000 people unemployed for a year or more.

The successful job club and job interview guarantee schemes, including work trials, will both be expanded to provide an additional 180,000 places. Training for work will give training and enterprise councils greater flexibility to provide over 300,000 adults with opportunities to improve, update and learn new skills, or do work of benefit to the local community.

Job Clubs

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job clubs were operational in each region and for Great Britain as a whole at the latest available date and for each year since 1987; how many of them in each region catered for groups with special needs; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. Cooper to Ms. Clare Short, dated 9 December 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, it is the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the Agency's Chief Executive to answer Parliamentary Questions about relevant operational matters. In his absence, I am replying to your question about the number of Jobclubs operational since 1987.

Table 'A' attached shows the number of Jobclubs at the end of each operational year (end March) from 1986-87. The number of Jobclubs at the end of 1986-87 is only available as a national total, but regional breakdowns are shown for subsequent years. The most recent figures (October 1992), are also given.

Table 'B' shows the number of standard and specialist Jobclubs by region and nationally at the end of March 1992. Although specialist Jobclubs were introduced as pilots in previous years, this was the first year for which separate statistics were recorded. The most recent figures (September 1992), are also given.

All Jobclubs help people who face particular difficulties in the labour market and most will have members who either have some degree of literacy or language problem, have a disability or have been in prison. Similarly, all Jobclubs are open to executives and managers. In response to the rise in unemployment at executive levels we have been opening some Jobclubs which focus particularly on that client group, though the activities and operations are very similar to the standard provision.

For ex-offenders and people with disabilities, our policy is to integrate them into our standard provision wherever possible. The existence of a very small number of Jobclubs targeted specifically at such clients is aimed at developing our expertise which can help improve provision over the whole network.

Supportive Jobclubs provide additional help to people with more severe problems who cannot cope in the standard provision. They are proving a useful way of extending the range of people Jobclubs can help, especially in terms of literacy or language, or people with a severe lack of confidence who have been unemployed for a long time.

In her statement to the House on 12 November 1992, the Secretary of State indicated, amongst other things, that there will be a further expansion of Jobclubs in 1993-94. We expect to target part of the expansion towards supportive Jobclubs. An evaluation of this provision is nearing completion and we shall want to consider the findings before deciding on the balance between the standard and supportive approaches.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Market Testing

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment to which of those of her Department's activities due to be market-tested by 30 September 1993 the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/EEC will apply.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Whether or not the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/EEC will apply to an individual case depends on the facts of the case; and there are a number of tests to be applied. For example, it needs to be shown that an undertaking or part of an undertaking is actually being transferred.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a timetable showing when he plans to market-test those activities listed for testing before 30 September 1993.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The citizens charter White Paper, "The Citizen's Charter: First Report 1992" (Cm. 2101), shows the main activities which are included in the Employment Department market-testing programme up to 30 September 1993.

Planning is well under way.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 10 December 1992

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Officers' Quarters

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to what fund the sums received from the selling of prison officers' quarters have been placed; and if he will make a statement as to the use made of these sums.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Receipts from the sale of prison officers' quarters are taken as appropriations in aid to defray the costs of the prison service. Any sums in excess of those authorised to be used in that way are paid into the Consolidated Fund.

Terrorism

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will review the advice and financial assistance given in respect of public buildings damaged by terrorist action on mainland Britain following the IRA bombing of Shrewsbury castle.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Advice on the protective security of buildings is available from chief officers of police. In Great Britain, where insurance cover is available in respect of criminal damage to property, including damage caused by acts of terrorism, the Government do not provide any financial assistance.

Metropolitan Police Commissioner

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what selection criteria are used in determining the appointment of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Mr. Charles Wardle: When considering the suitability of senior police officers for the appointment, my right hon. and learned Friend had regard to the operational and managerial experience needed for leading the Metropolitan police service.

Immigration Detention Centres

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) suicides and (b) attempted suicides have occured at Harmondsworth immigration detention centre in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: One suicide has occurred in Harmondsworth detention centre over this period. It occurred in 1990.

Records of incidents of self-injury by detainees which might amount to attempted suicide have been maintained only since 1986. The number of such incidents is as follows:

	Number
1986	Nil
1987	4
1988	2
1989	1
1990	Nil
1991	Nil
[1]1992	Nil

[1] To date.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the weekly cost of holding an immigration detainee at (a) Harmondsworth immigration detention centre and (b) Her Majesty's prison, Haslar.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Harmondsworth detention centre is managed under contracts, and the costs involved are not disclosed on grounds of commercial confidentiality. The average net operating cost per inmate per week for all prison service establishments for the financial year to 31 March 1992 was £406, and it would be reasonable to assume that the cost of accommodating immigration detainees at Haslar is of a similar order.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deaths in custody have occurred at Harmondsworth immigration detention centre in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: One death has occurred at Harmondsworth detention centre over this period. It occurred in 1990. A fire at the centre in 1989 resulted in the subsequent death in hospital of one detainee.

Illegal Immigrants

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate how many illegal immigrants are working in the London area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Comprehensive information on the number of persons working in breach of the conditions imposed on their leave to enter or to remain in the United Kingdom is not available. In many cases it is not possible to determine whether a person is working illegally until he/she has been traced and interviewed.

President-elect Clinton

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what purpose and at whose request officials of his Department examined Home Office files to ascertain whether President-elect Clinton had applied for United Kingdom citizenship.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information was passed on by his Department during 1992 to journalists in respect of Mr. Bill Clinton's period of temporary residence in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when a search was authorised of Home Office records in respect of Mr. Bill Clinton's period of study in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the checking of Home Office files for information on Governor Bill Clinton.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the reasons for the examination undertaken into his Department's records as to whether Mr. Bill Clinton had applied for United Kingdom citizenship while studying in Britain; by whom the investigation was authorised; on what dates the research was undertaken; what were the total costs of the work involved; and what was the result of the investigation regarding Mr. Clinton.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) on 9 December, at columns 662-63, to which I have nothing to add.

War Crimes

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) of 30 November, Official Report, column 8, how many of the few records relating to the wartime Nazi occupation of the Channel islands that have been held by the Home Office on extended closure relate in any way to allegations of war crimes atrocities that may have been committed by (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-United Kingdom citizens on the island of Alderney, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Only seven files have been retained on extended closure under section 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1958. It has been the practice of successive Administrations not to disclose the contents of records which are so withheld from public release. The papers will, however, be made available to any official prosecuting authority investigating alleged war crimes.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Walsall North (Mr. Winnick) of 30 November, Official Report, columns 7-8, how many records from the few records relating to the wartime Nazi occupation of the Channel islands that have been held by the Home Office on extended closure have been passed to prosecuting authorities in the United Kingdom or in Germany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: None; but none has been requested. It is the policy of the Home Office that such records—whether open or closed—may be made available to any official prosecuting authority which requests them for the purposes of investigations or prosecutions concerning alleged war crimes.

Police (Firearms)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has held with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the policy of stop and search exercises involving armed police officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The exercise by the Metropolitan police of their statutory powers to stop vehicles and, if necessary, to search them is an operational matter and as such falls within the discretion of the Commissioner. So, too, does the decision when, and in what manner, armed police should be deployed in support of such operations.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of persons currently held on remand in gaols in England and Wales; and if he will give a breakdown showing (a) the number of male and female remand prisoners, (b) the number in each over 18 years but under 21 years and (c) the number under the age of 18 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 1 December 1992]: The latest readily available information which includes the age breakdown requested relates to 30 June 1992 and is given in table 1.

Ammonium Nitrate Fertilisers

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which ammonium nitrate fertilisers banned from sale in Northern Ireland are on the market in England; and what is the maximum percentage of ammonium nitrate in fertilisers on sale in England.

Mr. Soames: I have been asked to reply.

Ammonium nitrate fertilisers containing more than 79 per cent. ammonium nitrate are banned in Northern Ireland. Such fertilisers on sale in England may contain up to approximately 99 per cent. ammonium nitrate.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Industrial Sites

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in obtaining land for industrial sites in Kilkeel in the constituency of South Down.

Mr. Atkins: The Industrial Development Board—IDB—has no plans to acquire land for industrial sites in Kilkeel, as industrially zoned land is already available in private ownership in the town.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in obtaining land for industrial sites on the Ballydugan road, Downpatrick; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The IDB is in negotiation with Dunleath Estates to acquire a six-acre site at Ballydugan road, Downpatrick. It is hoped that agreement can be reached soon.

Housing (Funding)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which housing associations submitted applications for funding for the purchase of empty homes by the closing date for applications on 30 November; and how many homes each of these housing associations submitted for consideration.

Surveys and Consultants' Reports

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of all surveys and consultants' reports commissioned by Northern Ireland Electricity and the Department of Economic Development since 1985 and the cost to Northern Ireland Electricity and the Department of Economic Development of each survey or consultant's report.

Mr. Atkins: Information on surveys and consultants' reports commissioned by Northern Ireland Electricity since 1985 is not readily available in the form requested and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Information is not available on surveys and consultants' reports commissioned by the Department of Economic Development prior to 1988. Details of surveys and consultants' reports commissioned since then are as follows:

Conductive Education

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial or administrative support has been offered by the Department of Education or the education and library boards to the Conductive Therapy Primary School established in Dungannon; and if he will undertake to ensure that all suitable students requiring conductive education will have an opportunity to attend this school.

Mr. Hanley: None. The Department of Education understands that the Buddy Bear Trust is proposing to establish an independent school in Dungannon for children with motor disorders. Independent schools do not receive assistance from public funds, though they are required to comply with statutory procedures regarding registration. To date, no such application has been received. Education and library boards are responsible for identifying, assessing and determining the special educational provision for children with special educational needs. If a board considers that provision should be made other than at a grant-aided school, it is obliged to seek the Department's approval. In considering such a placement, the board and the Department would seek to establish that this best meets the child's special educational needs.

Local Government Elections

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will announce the composition of district electoral areas for the local government elections in May 1993.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have today laid before Parliament the report of the District Electoral Areas Commissioner, Dr. Maurice Hayes, which contains his recommendations for the grouping of wards into district electoral areas for the purpose of local government elections in Northern Ireland. I have accepted the recommendations without modification and shall shortly bring forward for approval a draft Order in Council under section 38(1)(a) of the Northern Ireland Constitutional Act 1973 giving effect to the commissioner's recommendations.

ENVIRONMENT

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the council of the Association for the Conservation of Energy; and if he will make a statement concerning the value he places upon the role of the association in the development of policies concerning the energy efficiency industry.

Mr. Howard: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 26 November, Official Report, column 827.

Business Rates

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to encourage local authorities to use their powers to reduce the burden of business rates in cases of hardship.

Mr. Redwood: Local authorities are able to offset 75 per cent. of the cost of granting hardship relief against the non-domestic rates pool. Guidance on the relief was issued to authorities in 1990, but discretion as to when, and whether, to use the powers lies entirely with them having regard to the interests of their community charge payers.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce an incentive for local authorities to notify the Valuation Office of new non-domestic property in their area to ensure that rating lists are kept properly up to date.

Mr. Redwood: We have today laid regulations that will allow billing authorities to retain until the end of the year the benefit of any additional rates they collect when non-domestic property is improved or first included in the rating list. The new arrangements will apply from 1 April 1993. This will, I am sure, be a welcome incentive to local authorities.

Housing

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding increasing the stock of rented accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have received a number of representations from the National Federation of Housing Associations and others about the need to maintain output from the Housing Corporation's programme.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his autumn statement plans to allocate around £6 billion to the Housing Corporation over three years from 1992-93. Over these years, housing associations will be able to provide considerably more than the 153,000 new social homes forecast in our election manifesto. Over the four years to 1995-96, the Government plan to provide £7·5 billion in support of the corporation's capital expenditure. In addition, we hope that associations will be able to attract a further £3 billion from the private sector.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new housing association properties have been made available in (a) England and (b) Wales in each year since 1974.

Mr. Baldry: New housing for rent made available by housing associations in England and Wales since 1974-75, with subsidy from the Housing Corporation and Tai Cymru—from 1989-90—has been as follows:

	England	Wales
1974-75	242	4
1975-76	4,288	105
1976-77	10,260	355
1977-78	20,521	644
1978-79	23,782	1,057
1979-80	20,693	1,534
1980-81	25,956	1,173
1981-82	20,014	2,328
1982-83	21,637	2,115
1983-84	20,658	1,535
1984-85	25,335	1,487
1985-86	21,329	1,520
1986-87	19,981	1,424
1987-88	18,183	1,767
1988-89	13,925	1,662
1989-90	17,728	2,442
1990-91	19,843	3,060
1991-92	25,815	3,548

These figures include housing made newly available for rent when tenants take advantage of grants to help them to move into owner occupation.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many families were housed in temporary bed-and-breakfast accommodation by local authorities in (a) England and (b) Wales in each year since 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Estimates of the average number of households who were being dealt with under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985 and were temporarily placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in England are as follows:

Averages for years ending September	Households in bed and breakfast
1985	4,250
1986	6,350
1987	9,970
1988	11,240
1989	11,550
1990	11,960
1991	12,470
1992	11,880

For information about Wales I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was spent by local authorities in (a) England and (b) Wales in each year since 1985 on the provision of temporary bed-and-breakfast family accommodation.

Mr. Baldry: The net cost to local authorities since 1985 of providing bed-and-breakfast accommodation in England was as follows:

	Net expenditure (£ million)
1985-86	33·9
1986-87	75·5
1987-88	104·5
1988-89	90·2
1989-90	72·6
1990-91	66·3

For information about Welsh authorities I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 3 December, Official Report, column 295, for what period Mr. Wallace Mackenzie, Mr. Michael Roberts, Mr. Jack Wolkind and Sir Godfrey Taylor have been reappointed to the board of the London residuary body.

Mr. Robin Squire: Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. Roberts and Mr. Wolkind have not yet been reappointed. Sir Godfrey Taylor has been reappointed to serve until 31 March 1995 or until the winding up of the London residuary body, whichever is the sooner.

Market-testing

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to which of those of his Department's activities due to be market-tested by 30 September 1993 the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC acquired rights directive 77/189/EEC will apply.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 9 December 1992]: It is too early to say whether the EC acquired rights directive 77/187 and the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981—TUPE—will apply to any of the Department's activities due to be market-tested before 30 September 1993. The nature, scope and terms and conditions for market-testing each activity will be carefully considered in a case-by-case basis by the Department's legal advisers to determine whether they amount simply to contracting-out, or involve the transfer of an undertaking or part of an undertaking to which the TUPE regulations will apply.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a timetable showing when he plans to market-test those activities listed for testing before 30 September 1993.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 9 December 1992]: Market-testing of the following activities, of which the main ones are listed under my Department in Cm 2101, is expected to have been completed by the end of September 1993:

Accommodation Facilities Management
Accountants
Central Reprographics
Conveyancing
Design, Drawing and Print Services
Economists
Professional Property Services
Registry Services
Statistical Support Services
Training
Travel Services
Workshops and Stores

All these market-testing exercises are well under way and are proceeding as planned. The Department expects to invite tenders for these functions in the period February to June 1993 if they are shown to be viable areas for testing following the more detailed investigations into the scope for market-testing which are now under way.

City Action

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the budget allocations made to each city action team by his Department for each year from 1989-90 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1989-90 prices.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 9 December 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 23 June 1992, Official Report, column 132. The 1987-88 prices quoted can be converted into 1989-90 prices by multiplying by 1·143. For 1992-93 £4·0 million of the special budget was transferred to support city challenge round 1. Provisional allocation of the £4·4 million balance for 1992-93 is as follows:

City Action Team	Provisional Allocation £000
Nottingham/Leicester/Derby	500
Liverpool	500
London	900
Tyne and Wear	500
Leeds/Bradford	500

City Action Team	Provisional Allocation £000
Birmingham	500
Manchester/Salford	500
Cleveland	500
Total	4,400

Earth Summit

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken on the preparation of a national plan based on the forest principles agreed at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 7 December]: I have been asked to reply.

The guiding objective of the forest principles is to contribute to the management, conservation and sustainable development of forests and to provide for their multiple and complementary functions and uses. These principles already underlie the Government's forestry policy, the various elements of which were drawn together and published in a single statement in September 1991. This set the framework for the development of forestry in Britain.

The Government have now started preparing their national plan for the implementation of the forest principles. This will be published before the end of 1993.

Shrewsbury Castle (Bombing)

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice and assistance he has given to Shrewsbury and Atcham borough council following the IRA bombing in August of Shrewsbury castle.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have been asked to reply.

Advice on the protective security of buildings is available from chief officers of police. In Great Britain, where insurance cover is available in respect of criminal damage to property, including damage caused by acts of terrorism, the Government do not provide any financial assistance.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

East Sussex

Mr. Bowden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance is available to stimulate economic development and attract investment to (a) the borough of Brighton, (b) the coastal area between Hove and Hastings in East Sussex and (c) the county of East Sussex.

Mr. Sainsbury: Businesses in these areas have access to a wide range of assistance provided by my Department with the support of the Sussex training and enterprise council. DTI services include the enterprise initiative, offering expert advice on different aspects of business development, " Managing in the 90s" and other support providing grants for the development of innovative ideas and projects. Help for exporters is available from overseas trade services operated by the DTI. The Federation of Sussex Industries, local enterprise agencies and other local business support organisations deliver a wide range of business services to Sussex companies.

My Department maintains regular contact with local authorities in East Sussex over economic development issues and inward investment opportunities.

Wind-generated Electricity

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to increase the generation of wind-generated electricity in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Wind-generated electricity is being implemented in Wales with support from the non-fossil fuel obligation. Two wind farms have recently become operational with an installed capacity of 14·4 MW. A further five wind farms with an installed capacity of 46·4 MW are currently under construction and expected to be delivering electricity to the grid within the next six months.

Post Office

Mr. Welsh: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received on the future of Post Office services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: I have received a number of representations from interested parties and the general public on the future of Post Office services.

I have held, or am due to hold, meetings with the following in connection with the review of the structure and organisation of the Post Office: the Post Office, the Post Office Users National Council, Union of Communication Workers, National Communications Union, Communications Managers Association, National Union of Civil and Public Servants, Post Office Unions Council, the National Federation of Sub-Postmasters, the Association of International Courier and Express Services, TNT Express (UK), DHL International (UK) Ltd., Securicor Omega Express, Britdoc, Mail Users Association, Direct Marketing Association, Periodical Publishers Association, British Printing Industries Federation, European Mail and Express Services Users Association.

In addition, my officials and consultants appointed to advise the Government have met Business Post, Electronic Equipment Association, Mail Order Traders Association, BT, Girobank and other Government Departments.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to complete the review of the organisation and structure of the Post Office and to publish his recommendations.

Mr. Leigh: Work is continuing on the Post Office review. No date for completion has been set. The Government will announce their conclusions in due course.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received on the Green Paper on the development of the single market for postal services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester (Mr. French) on 18 November, Official Report, column 226.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reasons underlie the increase in the Post Office's negative external financial limit from 1992-93 to 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: At a time when there is very great pressure on the public sector borrowing requirement, it is reasonable that the Government should look for a higher level of return from the Post Office.

Petroleum Engineering Directorate

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the independent consultants' report into the transfer of the petroleum engineering directorate from London to Aberdeen.

Mr. Eggar: Decisions on this report will be announced as soon as possible. It is certainly my intention to publish it.

Mineral Rights

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what will become of British Coal's mineral rights upon privatisation.

Mr. Eggar: Decisions on privatisation will have to take account of the coal review and the debate on the White Paper in the new year.

Export Controls

Mr. Hague: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to update the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1991.

Mr. Needham: A revised Export of Goods (Control) Order has been made and sent today to the Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments and laid in the Library of both Houses. It will implement changes to export controls agreed in international forums and introduce a requirement for users of some open general export licences to register with the Department of Trade and Industry. It will come into force on 31 December 1992.

Sales Promotions

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to safeguard consumers by ensuring that offers of free flights from retailers and manufacturers as part of sales promotions are genuine.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 2 December 1992]: Sales promotions involving the offer of free flights are already subject to a number of controls, both statutory and voluntary.

My Department takes the view that a false statement as to the provision of free flights could constitute an offence under the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 and a false statement that a service is free could constitute an offence under part III of the Consumer Protection Act 1987. Trading standards officers are responsible for enforcing the legislation.

Under the voluntary system of controls in advertising and sales promotion, the codes of practice administered by the Advertising Standards Authority—ASA—require all sales promotion material to be legal, decent, honest and truthful. Where someone has reason to believe that a free-flight offer may not be genuine, he should take the matter up with the relevant authorities.

I do not consider that any additional controls over offers of free flights are necessary at the present time.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if his inspectors will investigate current offers of free flights and report to him on (a) the supply of flights meeting the demand generated by the purchase and (b) the financial security of the firms responsible for providing the flights.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 2 December 1992]: No. Under the British code of sales promotion practice, promoters are required to take all reasonable steps to avoid disappointing the consumer. This includes ensuring that a reasonable estimate of the likely response to a promotion is made before consumers are invited to participate. The ASA regularly reminds advertisers that consumers should be able to understand without difficulty what offers consist of and any restrictions imposed on them.

British Steel

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has made to the American Government to secure the withdrawal of the anti-dumping tariff imposed on British Steel on 30 November.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 4 December 1992]: I am not aware of any anti-dumping tariff imposed on British Steel on 30 November.

Motor Cycles

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the makes and models of motor cycles of over 100 bhp currently sold in the United Kingdom, indicating the numbers of each model sold and the value of sales in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 7 December 1992]: The data requested about makes and models of motor bikes over 100 bhp is not collected either by the Government or the Motor Cycle Industry Association.

Shipbuilding Industry

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will seek European intervention fund assistance to resuscitate the British shipbuilding industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 9 December 1992]: The shipbuilding intervention fund is already available to merchant shipbuilders in the United Kingdom. Our agreement with the European Commission forbids the provision of subsidy to those companies which were privatised as warship builders.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Television Licence Fee

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Bradford, West on 19 November 1992, Official Report, column 316, if he will increase the value of the reduction in television licence fee available for all registered blind people.

Mr. Brooke: No.

Windsor Castle

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, if he will list and give details of the vehicles belonging to the Windsor Castle fire brigade over the past three years, with the date of each vehicle's disposal and date and details of replacement.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 3 December 1992]: In November 1989, the Windsor Castle fire brigade retained three vehicles, a "Firefly", custom-built fire fighting vehicle originally purchased by the Property Services Agency but now the property of the royal household, and two Land-Rovers. One Land-Rover was replaced in February 1991 with a Ford Transit personnel carrier which was itself replaced in March 1992 by a Leyland DAF Crewbus. The other Land-Rover was 12 years old and withdrawn from service in November 1991. The vehicles currently in use by the castle fire brigade are the Firefly and the Leyland DAF Crewbus.

PRIME MINISTER

Energy Policies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what progress has been made in the development of (a) coal policy, (b) renewable energy policy, (c) nuclear research and development policy and (d) energy conservation policy in the European Community during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council.

The Prime Minister: The Energy Council discussed European coal issues on 30 November, during which the Commission presented its new proposals on subsidies for coal mines. The Council agreed on the text of a decision intended to foster the development of new and renewable energy sources. The Council noted the progress officials had made in discussing a proposed directive designed to increase energy efficiency in buildings, industry and road vehicles. The Council had earlier adopoted a directive on energy labelling of appliances. Progress on nuclear R and D was satisfactory.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what progress has been made in consolidation of the exchange rate mechanism during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council.

The Prime Minister: Following the severe financial turbulence which affected a number of ERM currencies in the autumn, I called the European Council in Birmingham on 16 October. This decided that the mechanism should be analysed in the light of developments in capital markets and in the European and world monetary systems. The work was remitted to ECOFIN. Further strains have recently confirmed the need for this work.

Sees and Titles

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister (1) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Eltham of 18 May, Official Report, column 5, whether the consultation of Church authorities includes the Catholic Bishops Conference of England and Wales;

(2) what changes he proposes to official recognition of territorial sees of the Roman Catholic Church in Scotland or, in so far as restrictions apply, in Northern Ireland;

(3) when he expects to propose changes to official recognition of territorial sees and titles of the Roman Catholic Church in England and Wales.

The Prime Minister: Consultations with Church authorities and others about the official recognition of Roman Catholic territorial designations within the United Kingdom are making good progress but have not yet been completed. We shall be seeking the views of the relevant Roman Catholic authorities as part of that consultation.

President de Klerk

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library the documents he received from President de Klerk during the President's recent visit to the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: No, as the correspondence involves matters of national security.

Civil List

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister what is the time-lag between the annual payments into the civil list and the reinvestment of specified annuities to the Consolidated Fund.

The Prime Minister: If the right hon. Member is referring to Her Majesty's reimbursement of the Consolidated Fund for the section 3 annuities, refunds are normally made each November, for payments made during the course of the calendar year. The timing follows that of the first voluntary reimbursement by Her Majesty in November 1975.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister if interest on the early-years surpluses on the civil list under the current 10-year agreement is retained within the civil list.

The Prime Minister: Yes. Any surplus at the end of the 10-year period would be carried forward and taken account of in the settlement for the next period.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister what investments the royal trustees consider appropriate for the early-year surpluses on the civil list.

The Prime Minister: The surpluses are prudently invested in the United Kingdom from within a range approved by the royal trustees.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what is the policy adopted by Ministers if hon. and right hon. Members request that replies to letters concerning constituents abroad come from Ministers and not from chief executives or departmental heads of agencies.

The Prime Minister: The Government's policy on dealing with letters from hon. and right hon. Members on agency matters was most recently set out in the Government's reply to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee's 1990 report on the next steps initiative, Cm 1263, which said:

"It is for Ministers responsible for particular Agencies to respond in the way they consider most helpful and appropriate to inquiries raised by Members. Ministers will normally ask the Chief Executive to reply to letters which concern day-to-day operational matters delegated to the Agency."

The fact that a Member's inquiry was made on behalf of a constituent who lived abroad would not in itself provide a reason to change this approach.

Alois Brunner

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if he will discuss with his counterparts in the European Council a joint approach to the Syrian Government in support of Germany's request for the extradition of Alois Brunner for Nazi war crimes against humanity.

The Prime Minister: The case of Alois Brunner is not on the agenda for the European Council. Member states are aware of the continuing strength of feeling behind calls for his extradition. Most recently, Germany has made clear to Syria its own and wider European concerns on this matter.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions Ombudsman

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has (a) to appoint additional pensions ombudsmen on a regional basis and (b) to increase the resources allocated to the present pensions ombudsman;

(2) what plans he has to increase funding to the office of the pensions ombudsman.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to appoint additional pensions ombudsmen. Resources are allocated to the pensions ombudsman taking account of projected workloads and costs. These are reviewed from time to time as part of the normal process of reviewing public expenditure.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) physically disabled and (b) sensorily disabled people are employed in his Department; and what percentage they are of the total work force.

Mr. Burt: On 1 July 1992 the number of registered disabled staff employed in this Department was 1,484, which represented 1·7 per cent. of the total number of staff in post.

Notes:

1. Figures are not available for non-registered disabled staff.

2. Full details of the breakdown of figures between physically and sensorily disabled staff are not available.

Benefits Statistics

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing total spending on single payments in each year since 1985 and community care grants since 1988 in cash and real terms.

Mr. Burt: Details of community care grant expenditure in both cash and real terms are in the Library.

Single payment expenditure is in the table.

£ million

	Total expenditure	Real terms expenditure
1985-86	335	504
1986-87	330	481
1987-88	214	296

Note:

Real terms figures have been calculated using the GDP deflator and may alter.

Occupational Social Security Schemes

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the implementation of schedule 5 to the Social Security Act 1989 and paragraph 7 of schedule 4 to the Social Security Act 1990.

Miss Widdecombe: These provisions were designed to give effect to EC directive 86/378 on equal treatment in occupational social security schemes which was due to be implemented by 1 January 1993. However the European Court of Justice held in the Barber case on 17 May 1990 that occupational pensions are pay and must be equal under article 119 of the EC treaty. This has left considerable areas of uncertainty, including questions as to the status of the directive and the validity of the derogations it would have allowed. We expect the Coloroll case, which is currently before the European Court of Justice, to begin to resolve some of these uncertainties. I have, therefore, decided not to bring schedule 5 to the 1989 Act into force with effect from 1 January 1993 but to introduce legislation, amended as necessary, when the uncertainties are resolved. I shall consider the implementsation of paragraph 7 of schedule 4 to the 1990 Act in the context of this legislation and of any consequential review of provisions relating to contracting out.

Wages Councils

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimates his Department have made of the increased entitlements to benefits which will result from the abolition of wages councils.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) on 11 November, at column 817.

EDUCATION

Primary Schools, Kent

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many children (a) under eight years and (b) eight to 11 years of age are in (i) local authority schools, (ii) independent schools and (iii) grant-maintained schools in each local education area in Kent;

(2) how many places are available at the present time and how many places will be available at 1 April 1993 for children (a) under eight years and (b) eight to 11 years of age in (i) local authority schools, (ii) independent schools and (iii) grant-maintained schools in each local education area in Kent.

Mr. Forth: This information is not available centrally.

Thomas Becket School, Knowsley

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will undertake an investigation of the drawing of the pupils of Thomas Becket school, Knowsley, into the debate on that school's opting out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received no complaint about the drawing of pupils into the debate about grant-maintained status for Thomas Becket school.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will introduce guidance for the conduct of ballots in respect of applications for grant-maintained schools under which head teachers or staff would be prohibited from suggesting to parents or pupils that a vote against grant-maintained status would involve (a) the loss of particular teachers' jobs or (b) difficulty for certain pupils in completing their GCSE and A-level courses.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend issues, and from time to time updates, guidance on the overall conduct of ballots. In addition, the Department's letter of 3 November reminded local education authorities and other bodies, what in his view are the proper duties and responsibilities of the parties involved in the ballot process. We would expect representatives of LEAs and schools involved in ballots in respect of applications for grant-maintained status to act responsibly and professionally.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Commercial Court

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps are being taken to appoint an additional commercial judge to restore the full complement in the commercial court.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Mr. Justice Colman, who was yesterday appointed to the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court, has been nominated to be a judge of the commercial court.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the future of HLCA payments.

Mr. Gummer: United Kingdom Agriculture Ministers have completed the autumn review of economic conditions in the hills and uplands.

The review has shown that the average net farm income of livestock producers in the United Kingdom's hill and upland areas is forecast to show a significant rise for the second year running. Specialist sheep farmers in Great Britain are seeing a large increase in their incomes as a result of the strong market for store lambs and increased returns from the ewe premium and the special supplement payable on ewes kept in the less-favoured areas—LFA.

Hill sheep farmers' receipts will be further boosted by an increase in the annual ewe premium of about £1·70 per ewe under the 1992 scheme as a consequence of the green pound devaluations which have already taken place. Although this will be partly offset by higher input costs, any further devaluations at the beginning of next year as a result of revised agrimonetary arrangements would provide an additional boost.

As a consequence of these favourable developments, the rates of hill livestock compensatory allowances—HLCA—paid on sheep in the severely disadvantaged areas—SDA—of the LFA are considered to be greater than is necessary to compensate for the permanent natural handicaps of farming in those areas. These rates will accordingly be reduced by £2·25 to £6·50 per eligible ewe for hardy breed ewes and by £1·30 to £3·60 per ewe for other breeds in the SDA for the 1993 scheme.

We will, however, be sustaining HLCA rates for breeding cows at their current levels of £63·30 per eligible cow in the SDA and £31·65 per cow in the disadvantaged areas. The rate payable on eligible ewes in those areas will be adjusted upwards to bring it into line with the EC rules. The precise rate will depend upon the value of the green pound on 1 January 1993 and we will announce it shortly thereafter.

A statutory instrument giving effect to these new rates will be introduced early in the new year. Payments of claims will commence as quickly as possible thereafter.

The environmental initiative for the LFA which I announced last February is being sustained. A new definition of overgrazing has been included in the HLCA regulations to enable problems of serious overgrazing to be tackled more effectively. We shall be seeking powers from Brussels during 1993 to apply similar rules to the ewe premium. All HLCA applicants have been sent a free copy of the code of good upland management. Thirteen new upland environmentally sensitive areas in the United Kingdom have been announced, a focus of which will be the protection and enhancement of heather moorland. In addition, I secured in the common agricultural policy reform package provision for a livestock extensification scheme which we would expect to use primarily to deal with overgrazing in the LFA.

This series of measures is designed to tackle overgrazing in a cost-effective and equitable manner by focusing upon the areas where the problem occurs. The scaling of HLCAs remains a possible additional measure which we will keep under review.

Milk

Mr. Heald: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures his Department proposes to implement EC requirements concerning standardised milk and milk imports.

Mr. Curry: Following consultation with interested parties, the Government have today laid before Parliament regulations that will permit the production and sale of both standardised milk in England and Wales. Similar regulations are being made in Scotland and Northern Ireland. The Milk and Dairies (Standardisation and Importation) Regulations 1992, which will come into force on 1 January 1993, also implement single market measures relating to intra-Community trade in milk. They will remove the present requirement for checks to be made at the port of entry for milk entering England and Wales from other member states and will allow such imports of raw and thermised milk provided they are heat treated before they are sold to consumers. Regulations to amend the milk marketing schemes in Great Britain to put standardised milk within the milk marketing board's monopoly buying powers have also been laid.

Dietary Supplements

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he expects the forthcoming European directive on dietary supplements to include vitamin C in (a) tablet, (b) liquid or (c) powder form; and what steps are being taken by his Department to ensure that British consumers continue to have access to vitamin, mineral and other dietary supplements of their choice in those cases where no problems arising from self-overdosing have been recorded.

Mr. Soames: The discussion paper produced by the European Commission in advance of proposals for a directive did not deal in detail with individual vitamins. I have no further information on what the Commission may propose.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps have been taken by his Department to seek to identify other member Governments of the European Community which will agree to adopt his Department's position in respect of the forthcoming European directive on dietary supplements.

Mr. Soames: We have established the broad views of other member states in discussion in Brussels and through bilateral contacts. We will seek to persuade others of the merits of the United Kingdom case as negotiations proceed.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received concerning the conclusions of the Denner report; and what consideration he is giving to those representations.

Mr. Soames: I have received 63 representations on the Denner report in total. These have been considered and were taken into account in shaping our proposal submitted to the Commission earlier this year.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current state of progress on the Denner report commissioned by his Department on dietary supplements.

Mr. Soames: Action on most of the recommendations in the Denner report is dependent on the introduction of Community legislation on dietary supplements. We are awaiting Commission proposals in this area.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) physically disabled and (b) sensorily disabled people are employed in his Department; and what percentage they are of the total work force.

Mr. Curry: Counting part-time staff as half units, MAFF and its agencies employ 138·5 registered disabled staff. These figures represent 1·4 per cent. of total staff but do not take into account staff with disabilities who have chosen not to register. Information to distinguish between staff with physical or sensory disabilities is not held centrally.

Meat Inspections

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the extent of breakdown in hygiene in the food chain and the effect of replacing the current system of meat inspection by one of veterinary inspection.

Mr. Soames: The state veterinary service visits all licensed domestic slaughterhouses annually to check on compliance with existing meat hygiene legislation. Any hygiene problems noted during these visits are drawn to the attention of the local authority, which is currently responsible for enforcing the legislation.

These monitoring visits demonstrate that standards of hygiene and inspection in the domestic slaughterhouses are in general lower than in export-approved abattoirs which are already operating to the EC standards and which handle about half the meat produced in this country. The Government therefore supported the single market fresh meat directive which requires all meat to be produced to common standards of hygiene and inspection. Most post-mortem inspection will continue to be done by qualified meat inspectors, working under the supervision of the Official Veterinary Surgeon. The Government consider that veterinary supervision of all slaughterhouses will lead to an improvement in the protection of human and animal health and animal welfare. In the longer term, the proposed national meat hygiene service will provide a consistent and cost-effective inspection service in this specialised sector of the food chain, to the benefit of consumers and of the meat industry.

Sustainable Agriculture

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the standards and regulations which need to be defined for the United Kingdom and the EC in order to provide a basis for sustainable agriculture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: "Promoting Sustainable Agriculture and Rural Development" is the title of one chapter of "Agenda 21" which was agreed at the Earth Summit in June. The United Kingdom's response to "Agenda 21" will be covered in a report to the Sustainable Development Commission which will be submitted by the end of 1993. The Department will be contributing to this report as appropriate.

Poultry

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effects of low-flying aircraft on poultry farming.

Mr. Soames: The Department has made no general assessment of the effects of low-flying aircraft on poultry farming. However, when requested we provide advice to the Ministry of Defence Claims Commission on the veterinary aspects of individual incidents.

Tongues

Mr. Conway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the job losses in the British ox tongue processing industry as a result of the EC ban on the importation into the Community of North American supplies.

Mr. Curry: There is no ban on the importation into the Community of North American ox tongues as such. The import into the European Community of products derived from animals which have been treated with growth promoting hormones is, however, banned. Accurate figures on the number of jobs lost in the British ox tongue processing industry directly as a result of the ban on the use of growth promoting hormones are not available. However, since the ban was introduced, the canning industry has reported a reduction of 280 jobs.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the European Commission on the import of raw beef tongues from North America into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: We strongly opposed the ban on growth promoting hormones throughout the Community when it was introduced in 1989. This included writing directly to the European Agriculture Commissioner on the impact that the ban would have on canners of tongues in the United Kingdom.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect the recent GATT agreement between the United States of America and the EC and the proposed reduction in export subsidies will have on cereal prices in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: None. As the EC Commission has made clear, the agreement on agricultural issues reached with the United States in the context of the current GATT round is consistent with the reforms to common agricultural policy regimes agreed earlier this year.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect the recent GATT agreement between the United States of America and the EC will have on exports of British cereal crops to non-EC countries.

Mr. Curry: None. As the EC Commission has made clear, the agreement on agricultural issues reached with the United States in the context of the current GATT round is consistent with the reforms to CAP regimes agreed earlier this year.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect the recent GATT agreement between the United States of America and the EC will have on the percentage of land compulsorily set aside under the CAP.

Mr. Curry: The recent agreements between the United States and the EC on GATT agriculture questions pave the way for an overall agreement which will include restrictions on subsidised exports of cereals. The Commission does not consider that these restrictions should in themselves lead to any increase in the percentage of land set aside under the new arable arrangements adopted earlier this year as part of the CAP reform package.

The agreements also provide for a separate oilseeds base area for the 1994 and subsequent harvests. The set-aside percentage for this base area will continue to be the same as for other crops covered by the new arable arrangements, subject to a minimum set-aside requirement of 10 per cent. The current requirement under the arable regime is 15 per cent.

Animal Transport

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what steps he plans to take to ensure that, as required by article 5.2 of the new EC directive on the protection of animals during transport (91/628/EEC), itineraries are drawn up for animal transport journeys exceeding 24 hours to ensure that the animals are rested and given food and water;

(2) whether he will require his officials from 1 January 1993 to ensure that the animal welfare requirements of EC directive on the protection of animals during transport (91/628/EEC) have been taken into account before issuing health certificates under directive 90/425/EEC for animals being transported from the United Kingdom to other countries.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to the reply, 17 June 1992, c. 575]: EC directive 91/628 sets a framework of controls which are to be supplemented by additional Community rules. Commission proposals for these additional rules are still awaited and it is now clear that they will not be in place by 1 January 1993 when the directive is to be implemented. In this situation, the directive permits national measures to apply in the relevant areas pending implementation of the further Community rules.

The draft order to implement the directive in Great Britain was circulated for consultation at a time when the prospects for further Community measures remained unclear. It will now be revised so that national measures in the relevant areas will continue to apply.

The legislation will require animals beginning a journey in Great Britain to be rested, fed and watered after a maximum of 15 hours. Animals will also have to be fed and watered, as appropriate for the species, before the start of the journey. The current requirements for animals for export to be rested and inspected near the port will no longer apply, but there will be a requirement for inspection of export consignments at the place of origin by a veterinary surgeon. Where the directive lays down new requirements—for example, the requirement for the transport of animals and birds by air to comply with the International Air Transport Association live animals regulations—these will be applied. In areas where further Community rules are awaited, such as the design of vehicles, existing rules will continue to apply.

The legislation will give powers to inspectors to prevent journeys if the requirements, including those relating to feeding and watering arrangements, are not met.

Much concern has been expressed about further controls on animal transport. There have been fears that when the directive is implemented on 1 January 1993 much of our existing law could be removed. This will not happen. We will take full advantage of the provision in the directive for national rules to continue to apply pending the adoption of further Community measures. I have discussed this matter in detail with the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and am delighted to have its full support for the steps we will be taking.

The Government will continue to press for the outstanding issues to be resolved in the Community as soon as possible. In the meantime, the arrangements in the United Kingdom will provide a comprehensive system of controls to safeguard the welfare of animals in transport.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Union Treaty

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table showing in respect of each lettered article of the treaty on European union, the relevant international, Community or domestic court having final jurisdiction in respect of the matters contained in, and interpretation of, each article.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Article L of the treaty on European union indicates that the European Court of Justice—ECJ—shall only have jurisdiction in respect of those provisions amending the existing treaties, as set out in articles G to I, the final provisions—articles L to S—and any conventions concluded between states under article K.3(2)(c) which expressly give jurisdiction to the ECJ. Any questions concerning the interpretation of the common provisions—articles A to F—the provisions on a common foreign and security policy—article J—and the provisions on co-operation in the fields of justice and home affairs—article K—will be decided in accordance with the principles of international law. The high contracting parties may refer any dispute to the International Court of Justice—either by special agreement or where the states concerned have accepted the ICJ's compulsory jurisdiction—or to ad hoc arbitration.

Mullai Marimuthu

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts are being made by his Department to ascertain the whereabouts and welfare of Mullai Marimuthu, off 67 Lund point, Stratford, E15, currently held against her will in Madurai, Tamil Nadu.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Mullai Marimuthu is staying at her uncle's house in Madurai. A consular officer had planned to visit Madurai on 10 December to meet the British community, including Marimuthu. However, all flights in Tamil Nadu have been cancelled because of current disturbances. A consular official will visit Madurai as soon as practicable.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has of injuries caused to penguins in the Falkland Islands from the explosion of mines left over from the war.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are not aware of any such incidents.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what monitoring his Department undertakes of incidents of death and injury to wildlife in the Falklands caused by mines and other warlike devices left over from the war.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None. Injuries to wildlife caused by mines and other warlike devices are minimal. Most wildlife is too light to set off mines.

Gross Domestic Product

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest available information on the gross domestic product per head, as a proportion of the net European Community gross domestic product per head of (a) Poland, (b) Hungary and (c) Czechoslovakia, showing both the actual and proportional figures.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The latest published information—for 1990—is as follows:

	Gross domestic product per head (in US$)	As percentage of EC gross domestic product per head
European Community	16,373	—
Poland	1,700	10·4
Hungary	2,780	17·0
Czechoslovakia	3,140	19·2

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 7 December.

Mr. Hurd: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office and I represented the United Kingdom at the Foreign Affairs Council on 7 December, with my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for the discussion of the Uruguay round.

I briefed European Community ministerial colleagues on plans for handling the European Council in Edinburgh. The Council of Ministers had a further discussion on the future financing of the Community. They focused mainly on internal policies and administration issues, which had not been fully discussed at the conclave of Foreign and Finance Ministers on 27 November.

The Council noted that the essential elements of the Community's general framework for enlargement negotiations with applicants from the European Free Trade Association had been established. The Council agreed to forward the Norwegian application to the Commission for its opinion.

The Council discussed the European economic area in the light of the negative vote in the Swiss referendum. The Council noted that, without Switzerland, the agreement would require modifications. It invited the Commission to make early contact with the European Free Trade Association countries and to report to the Council on 21 December.

The Council discussed recent progress in the GATT Uruguay round negotiations, particularly on agriculture. It agreed that substantial results would be needed in the Geneva negotiations in non-agricultural areas as well.

Ministers discussed Commission proposals on Community trade instruments and important restrictions. The Council expressed concern over the handling by the United States Government of anti-dumping and countervailing duty cases affecting Community steel producers and asked the Commission to raise the matter with the United States authorities.

The Council discussed a report on European Community relations with the former Yugoslav republic of Macedonia presented by Ambassador O'Neill, my personal representative on the question. Ministers issued a statement on Somalia, welcoming the adoption of United Nations Security Council resolution 794.

In further preparation for the Edinburgh European Council, Ministers met separately on 8 December to discuss a possible solution to the Danish question, subsidiarity and openness. Ministers also discussed a Commission report on strengthening links with the countries of central and eastern Europe.

Bosnia

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has of the use of chemical weapons in warfare in the current fighting in Bosnia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 1 December 1992, Official Report, column 164.

WALES

Welsh Language

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales (a) speak the Welsh language and (b) are learning Welsh; what sums of Government money were spent on (i) teaching the language and (ii) otherwise promoting it during the current financial year; how much this represents per capita in Wales; how much per Welsh speaker and student; what were the figures five and 10 years ago; and what are his projections for the next three years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information from the 1991 census on the numbers of Welsh speakers will be published shortly by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in a monitor for Wales. I will then write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House. Information on the number of Welsh speakers five years ago is not available. The 1981 census recorded that out of a total population of 2,749,600 there were 503,500 Welsh speakers in Wales.

Direct Welsh Office financial support for the Welsh language in 1992-93 amounts to £7·6 million. Comparable figures for 1982-83 and 1987-88 were £1·8 and £2·8 million respectively. My right hon. Friend intends to announce shortly our direct support in 1993-94. Details of local education authorities' expenditure on the language, and the number of learners, are not held centrally.

Young Offenders (Cardiff Prison)

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many section 53 young offenders aged 16 years and under are currently placed in Cardiff prison.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None from Wales.

Churches' National Homes Coalition

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had from the Churches' National Homes Coalition; if he proposes to meet the Churches' National Homes Coalition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None, directly; and neither I nor my right hon. Friend have any plans to meet the Churches' National Homes Coalition.

Secure Unit

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales where the proposed secure unit for young offenders in south Wales will be sited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The joint local authority/Welsh Office working party, set up to take forward the development of the proposed secure unit, is progressing this work as quickly as possible.

Careers Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had concerning the careers service.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have received three letters about the careers service in the past 18 months.

House Building

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of houses to be built by (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations in Wales over the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend will be announcing the results of the current public expenditure survey in due course.

Youth Training

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the training and enterprise councils in Wales which have fulfilled their obligation of granting guaranteed youth training placements for all 16 to 17-year-olds.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is not possible to say that at a particular date all 16 and 17-year-olds have been allocated training placements because there is a stream of new entrants or re-entrants to the guarantee group. I am satisfied that all seven TECs in Wales are giving the highest priority to fulfilling their obligations under the youth training guarantee.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps are currently taken by his Department to monitor the availability and quality of youth training placements within each training and enterprise council area in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Officials in the Department regularly monitor management information provided by TECs on the numbers of young people seeking youth training placements and the number of placements available. TECs are also obliged through their operating agreement to have effective quality assurance systems to ensure that all TEC providers of training obtain and maintain the status of approved training organisations under the Secretary of State's published criteria or an alternative system approved by the Secretary of State, which is of equivalent or greater assurance and effectiveness.

Community Care

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps are being undertaken by his Department to monitor the consultation work with disabled people undertaken by local authorities in preparing their draft community care plans.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Department has been closely reviewing with each county planning team the draft social care plans. Part of this review has involved consideration of the consultation process with a variety of interested parties including disabled people. Other consultations have taken place with the voluntary sector and user and carer interests. It is proposed that such consultations will continue within an annual cycle.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the local authorities in Wales which have produced their community care plans in braille or on tape.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Social care plans are, by their nature, very bulky working documents and are not targeted at the general public. However, local authorities are required to produce information for the public on the key elements of their social care plans—the range of services available, how to gain access to them, how to make complaints or suggestions, and avenues of redress—in a range of formats including writing, tape and braille. Welsh Office guidance, issued September 1990, on the preparation of social care plans refers to this requirement.

Aston Hill, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement on traffic blight on Aston hill, Clwyd;

(2) if he will commission an urgent study of traffic queues on the A494 Aston hill, Clwyd.

Sir Wyn Roberts: An extensive traffic study of the north-east Clwyd area, a summary of which was sent to the hon. Gentleman in February 1992, identified the need to improve a number of sections of trunk road in the area to accommodate anticipated increases in traffic growth. On this basis, an improvement scheme for the A494 from the River Dee to Ewloe, including Aston hill, was introduced into the roads programme for Wales to alleviate traffic problems along this route.

At the present time, essential maintenance works are being carried out on this very busy length of trunk road and much thought has been given to traffic management measures so as to minimise delays.

Housing Estates (Crime)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what measures his Department operates to combat car crime on housing estates; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what measures his Department operates to combat break-ins on housing estates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Proposals for improving household security are eligible for consideration as crime prevention measures under the urban programme; any local authority in Wales may submit a bid. Projects which have received support recently include "Cardiff Safe and Secure" initiative, and improvements to the security of the communal areas of flats on the Sandfields estates in Port Talbot. Funds made available to victim support schemes have also on occasion been used to improve household security. In addition, under the Welsh Office elderly initiative scheme some £315,000 is being made available over a three-year period to support a project in Mid Glamorgan that is designed to improve the safety and well-being of senior citizens living in their own homes. In addition to providing improved door and window locks, and door viewers, the projects entails the provision of advice to the elderly on how to deal with bogus officials and confidence tricksters.

In June last year my right hon. Friend was pleased to perform the launch of "Secured by Design" in Wales. This is a major initiative promoted by the police to encourage house builders to incorporate improved crime prevention features in houses when they are built.

Security of council houses is a matter in the first instance for councils to address in assessing their priorities. It is open to tenants, subject to their landlords' permission, to make home security improvements.

As concerns car crime, the Welsh Office has supported the introduction of vehicle watch, which is a major police initiative to combat theft of vehicles and articles from them. Also, consideration is currently being given to supporting projects under the urban programme which are designed to divert young people from becoming engaged in car crime.

Urban Programme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much assistance under the urban programme (a) Alyn and Deeside and (b) Wrexham Maelor councils have received in each of the last five years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Urban programme allocations to Alyn and Deeside district council and Wrexham Maelor borough council for the last five years were:

	Alyn and Deeside £	Wrexham Maelor £
1988-89	279,627	487,641
1989-90	275,225	520,842
1990-91	225,225	776,511
1991-92	267,613	1,450,853
1992-93	100,000	599,559
Total	1,147,690	3,835,406

NHS (Competitive Tendering)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what decisions he has taken in regard to contracting out national health service jobs in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Competitive tendering of ancillary services in the NHS in Wales has led to improvements in the quality and delivery of service and to financial savings in excess of £4 million, thus releasing resources for direct patient care. The market testing of a much wider range of non-clinical services is actively being pursued by authorities, units and NHS trusts in accordance with the "Competing for Quality" White Paper. Decisions on the award of contracts are for local management. The applicability of the Transfer of undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 to NHS contracts is a particular issue which has been raised and the Department is seeking legal advice on whether current guidance should now be revised.

Hospitals

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of hospitals in Wales in 1979, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There were 173 hospitals open in Wales as at 31 December 1979 and 145 as at 31 December 1991. The number has not changed since. In the same period, the numbers of in-patients, out-patients and day patients treated have increased significantly.

Disabled Persons (Training)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the training and enterprise councils in Wales which have appointed a board member with the specific remit of training provision for disabled people.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Appointments to the boards of TECs are made in line with guidelines issued by the Department. The particular responsibilities of individual directors is a matter, therefore, for the TEC concerned. This varies between TECs.

All TECs in Wales have advisory groups that look at the training needs and provision for individuals with special training needs, including those with disabilities.

Ambulance Service (Clwyd and Gwynedd)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his plans for the ambulance service in Clwyd and Gwynedd.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Arrangements for the statutory provision of ambulance services is a matter for the health authorities locally, which have recently decided to combine the existing Clwyd and Gwynedd ambulance services to form the North Wales ambulance service from 1 April 1993.

My right hon. Friend has invited an application for NHS trust status from 1994 and the decision to so proceed is a matter for the service itself.

Caravans

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what measures he will take to assist people affected by the illegal parking of itinerants' caravans; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects to make a statement concerning permanent caravan sites for itinerants.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government's proposals for reform of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 and measures to tackle illegal camping were detailed in the consultation paper issued on 18 August. A statement will be made once all responses have been considered.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) physically disabled and (b) sensorily disabled people are employed in his Department; and what percentage they are of the total work force.

Mr. David Hunt: As at 1 July 1992, 38 members of staff in my Department had registered as disabled, representing 1·6 per cent. of all staff. My Department also employs several unregistered disabled people.

	Number of Registered Disabled Staff	Percentage of Departmental Total
Physically Disabled	25	1·0
Sensorily Disabled	13	0·5

Note: Part-time staff count as one unit.
Percentages do not add to the total because of rounding.

Valleys Initiative

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give percentage and actual figures for adult males (a) registered unemployed, (b) receiving supplementary benefit or income support and (c) economically inactive for each of the areas covered by the valleys initiative programme in October 1988 and October 1992 showing the percentage changes.

Mr. David Hunt: In October 1988 there were 23,328 unemployed males in the programme for the valleys area claiming benefit—15·9 per cent. of the work force. The figure for October 1992 was 25,954—18·5 per cent. of the work force. This represents an increase of 11·3 per cent. or 2·6 percentage points since October 1988. Male unemployment figures for individual districts which are wholly or partly within the valleys programme area were provided in my answer to the hon. Gentleman on 24 November, at columns 628-30.

Information on the total number of males in the valleys area in receipt of supplementary benefit or income support is not available.

Provisional 1991 population census estimates of economically inactive males in those districts that fall, at least in part, within the valleys programme boundary are given in the table. There are no valleys figures for 1988 or 1992.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was regional policy expenditure in the South Wales valleys initiative area for each of the years 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 (a) in total and broken down into, (b) regional selective assistance, (c) regional development grant and (d) regional enterprise grant.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is as follows:

£million

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Regional Selective Assistance	11·6	8·2	7·1	13·0

Regional Enterprise Grants	0·1	0·2	0·5	0·3
Total	28·9	16·1	14·5	16·1

Unemployment

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to alleviate unemployment in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Office, along with the development agencies and training and enterprise councils, already have in place very successful initiatives designed to encourage enterprise, create new jobs and safeguard existing ones. Regional selective assistance alone has been highly successful; with offers of assistance since 1979 forecast to safeguard over 53,000 jobs and to create almost 114,000 new jobs in Wales.

Four Crosses Creamery

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement regarding the closing of the Four Crosses creamery in mid-Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The closure of the Four Crosses creamery was a matter for the commercial judgment of Dairy Crest. I shall continue to do whatever I can to attract new investment to all parts of Wales and to that end will make available financial support as appropriate to assist individual projects.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Working Mothers

12. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of his taxation policies on working mothers.

Sir John Cope: The reduction in income tax rates since 1979 has benefited all earners, male and female.

Manufacturing Industry

16. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further action he intends to take to assist manufacturing industry.

Mr. Portillo: Manufacturing industry is best assisted by the conditions we have created of low inflation and low interest rates, as well as by a competitive exchange rate.

Single Market

17. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on the arrangements for recovering VAT on exports after the implementation of the single market.

Sir John Cope: There will be no change for exports to countries outside the Community. VAT registered traders can also zero-rate sales to VAT registered traders in other Community countries. In such cases, evidence will be required of removal to other member states such as carriers' consignment notes or shipping documents. If a VAT registered customer collects the goods, the seller should get the customer to sign for the goods, give his or her VAT number and various other particulars, such as destination address of the goods.

Visitors from outside the EC will continue to be able to purchase goods from high street shops and reclaim VAT when they export them from the EC.

Housing Expenditure

18. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the additional money allocated to housing expenditure in the autumn statement he estimates will have been spent by 1 January 1993.

Mr. Portillo: I am confident that the full £750 million, announced in the autumn statement as a boost to the housing market, will be spent by the end of this financial year. The amount that is spent by 1 January 1993 will depend, for example, on how quickly housing associations can complete the legal formalities on their purchases.

Value Added Tax

19. Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will exempt from value added tax all shoes and clothing bought for school children.

Sir John Cope: No. We agreed with other European partners in 1977 that, while we may retain those zero rates currently in force, subject to their being for clearly defined social reasons and for the benefit of the final consumer, we may neither widen their scope nor introduce new ones. Under the rates directive of 19 October 1992 the Government secured their retention.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many small businesses are not registered for VAT; and how many enterprises are registered.

Sir John Cope: Customs only has information concerning the number of businesses registered for VAT. At 30 November 1992 it was 1,643,679.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on value added tax on domiciliary care provision.

Sir John Cope: I cannot add to the answers I gave to the hon. Member on this subject on 18 November 1992, at columns 234-35.

Consumer Debt

20. Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the present level of consumer debt; and what was the comparable level of debt in 1982.

Mr. Nelson: The level of consumer debt outstanding at 30 September this year was £53 billion. The best estimate for the end of 1982 is £16 billion in 1982 prices, although changes in coverage mean that the figures are not strictly comparable.

Small Businesses

21. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which measures in the autumn statement were designed to help small businesses.

Mr. Portillo: The measures in the autumn statement were designed to rebuild confidence and to strengthen the economy and small businesses will benefit from these measures.

European Community (Contribution)

22. Mr. Milligan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will apply for moneys in the proposed EC cohesion fund to reduce Britain's net contribution to the EC budget.

Sir John Cope: The cohesion fund envisaged in the Maastricht treaty will be a structural fund for member states with a per capita gross national product less than 90 per cent. of the Community average. Purchasing power parities are used to calculate the relative wealth for these funds. On that basis, the United Kingdom would not therefore qualify for any assistance from the cohesion fund.

Capital Projects (Private Sector Investment)

23. Mr. Thomason: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will make a further announcement about encouraging private sector involvement in capital projects.

Mr. Portillo: In order to encourage the private sector to bring forward proposals, we released our guidance provided to Government Departments on implementing the initiative announced in the autumn statement.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take further steps to promote private sector investments in public sector projects.

Mr. Lamont: I announced some important changes in the use of privately raised finance in the autumn statement.

Bloodstock Industry

24. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further representations he has received about the effect of value added tax rates on the bloodstock industry; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: A wide range of representations continue to be received about VAT and bloodstock and the introduction of the single market. We are working hard with industry representatives to ensure that they are fully aware of the new VAT arrangements so that no one is unnecessarily disadvantaged by them. Officials stand ready to consider any proposals from the industry to ease the potential problems they face.

Economy

25. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received from the CBI concerning the health of the British economy.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer and I have frequent contact with representatives of industry, including the CBI, and pay close attention to their views on the economy. We have taken careful note of their concerns and proposals as well as the broad welcome given to the autumn statement.

Interest Rates

26. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current bank interest rate in each EC country.

Mr. Nelson: Three-month market interest rates in EC countries were as follows at close of business on 3 December.

	3 December (per cent.)
United Kingdom	7·2
Germany	8·9
France	10·8
Italy	14·7
Spain	16·0
Netherlands	8·9
Belgium	8·9
Denmark	18·8
Ireland	20·0
Greece	24·5
Portugal	19·1

Wage Settlements

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Confederation of British Industry on the need for moderate and affordable wage settlements.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. Friend has met representatives of the CBI on a number of occasions to discuss a variety of economic matters.

Credit Card Debt

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the confidentiality of credit card debts and the rate of interest demanded.

Mr. Nelson: The legal principle that a banker owes a duty of confidentiality to his customer and should not disclose to any third party information about a customer's personal affairs—the "Tournier" rules—was established by a legal case in 1924. In addition, the Data Protection Act 1984 requires that data should be collected fairly and lawfully; held only for for specified purposes; not disclosed other than in accordance with those purposes; and held in conditions of appropriate security to prevent unauthorised access. The interest rates charged by credit card companies are a matter for their own commercial judgment.

World Economy

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made on the effect of the world economy of the linking by certain countries in south-east Asia of their own currencies to the United States dollar; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury makes regular assessments of recent developments and prospects for the world economy. A forecast of the world economy was published at the time of the autumn statement.

VAT Collection Office

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review customer service in the VAT collection office.

Sir John Cope: It is intended to conduct at least two customer surveys during 1993, one specially for the VAT central unit, and a more general one covering the VAT business including services provided by local VAT offices. Some local offices are carrying out separate surveys to review and improve the service they provide.

In addition, quality service indicators define standards for customer service at all levels within Customs and Excise and they are reviewed regularly.

Pools Industry

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much accrued in tax to the Treasury in 1991-92 from the pools industry.

Sir John Cope: Revenue from pools betting duty in 1991-92 was £319·5 million.

VAT Returns

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what formula is adopted when deciding the penalty for late payment of VAT returns.

Sir John Cope: Under the Finance Act 1985 liability to default surcharge arises where a taxpayer persistently fails to render a return or pay any VAT due on time. After two defaults have occurred within twelve months, a third default within 12 months of the second results in a liability to a surcharge of 5 per cent. of the unpaid tax. The level of surcharge increases for subsequent defaults, but cannot exceed 20 per cent. for defaults incurred after 1 April 1992. The maximum surcharge was previously 30 per cent.

Council Tax

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was (a) the total cost of the valuation of properties in (i) Pendle and (ii) Lancashire for the purposes of introducing the council tax and (b) the cost per property in (i) Pendle and (ii) Lancashire.

Mr. Nelson: The total cost of the valuation banding of domestic properties was £63,045 in Pendle and £1,105,833 in Lancashire. The average valuation banding cost per property was £1·76 in Pendle and £1·90 in Lancashire.

Bank Accounts

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will investigate the qualifications laid down by the major banks regarding the ability of young people aged between 16 and 22 years to open bank accounts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: I have no plans to investigate this issue. The principles that banks will follow when allowing people to open accounts, and when providing credit to young people, are set out in the code of banking practice which was published in December 1991.

Treasury Income

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total income to the Treasury since May 1979 from (a) privatisation and (b) North sea oil revenues.

Mr. Nelson: Between 1979-80 and 1992-93, privatisation proceeds are expected to amount to £50 billion, and North sea oil revenues to £72 billion.

Bankruptcy

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to avoid placing small firms into bankruptcy for unpaid VAT or income tax, where the Government's legal and administrative costs of so doing are expected to be greater than the assessed likely recovery of moneys; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 4 December 1992]: In all cases, civil recovery through the courts is only taken as a last resort. Where a VAT registered taxpayer has ceased trading and the tax debt is not expected to increase, Customs policy is that legal action should only be taken where there is a prospect of recovering sufficient tax to make this action cost effective.

However, for those VAT-registered taxpayers who continue in business but fail to meet their VAT liability and where all other options for payment have been explored without success, Customs has no recourse other than to take legal action in order to prevent the VAT debt from increasing.

Inland Revenue policy is to take bankruptcy proceedings only as a last resort when all other attempts to encourage payment of tax debts have failed. The Revenue does, however, have to consider its duty to the Exchequer, employees who have had tax deducted from their wages and to the general body of taxpayers who pay their tax on time.

House Prices

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the percentage change in regional house price to earnings ratios in each region between the most recent quarter in 1992 for which information is available and the corresponding quarter of 1991.

Mr. Nelson: The latest published information on regional average earnings is for April 1992. The information requested, relating to the second quarter of 1992 and the corresponding quarter of 1991, is in the table:

	Average house price to earnings ratio
	Quarter 2 1991	Quarter 2 1992	Percentage change

United Kingdom	4·12	3·87	−6·1
North	3·28	3·38	+3·0

Northern Ireland	2·59	2·63	+1·5

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost of mortgage interest relief at source payments in each region in each year since 1979-80 and as a proportion of the total MIRAS payments for that year.

Mr. Dorrell: The available information is given in my reply to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) on 17 June 1992, Official Report, columns 537-38.

Personal Debt

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of personal disposable income was made up of personal sector debt in each region in each year since 1987.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 9 December 1992]: The information is not available.

Autumn Statement

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what reaction he has received from business organisations to his autumn statement.

Mr. Portillo: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Tiverton (Mrs. Browning).

Ministers (Personal Matters)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer under what guidelines the Treasury press office responds to inquiries about personal matters concerning Ministers; how many such inquiries were received by the Treasury press office on 13 April 1991; what action was taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury press office responds to inquiries about personal matters concerning Ministers by seeking guidance from the Ministers in question, and then taking follow-up action as appropriate. A large number of such inquiries were received on 13 April 1991. As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has already explained, the nature of the allegations made on that evening made it necessary for him to issue an immediate press statement, based on legal advice, and for related inquiries to be handled by the solicitors.

HEALTH

In-patient Waiting Lists

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish her plans for reducing in-patient waiting lists in London before implementation of the Tomlinson report.

Dr. Mawhinney: The report notes that significant progress has been made in reducing waiting times in London. In the year to 31 March 1992, the total number of patients waiting in inner London fell by nearly 10 per cent.

We shall ensure that the proposals arising from the report continue this trend.

Travellers Abroad

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps Her Majesty's Government took to alert British travellers to Malta about the outbreak of gastro-enteritis in Malta between December 1991 and January 1992;

(2) what is her policy with regard to alerting British holiday makers about epidemics in major overseas holiday destinations.

Dr. Mawhinney: When an outbreak of an infectious disease comes to the attention of the Department any action must take account of the nature of the disease, the number of cases, the certainty of the diagnosis and the strength of any connection with one site or area.

In December 1991 the Department received a report of an outbreak of gastro-enteritis which affected individuals staying in a particular hotel in Malta. As we had no evidence of a more widespread or ongoing problem, it was not appropriate to issue specific advice to travellers to Malta at that time.

General health advice to travellers is contained in a leaflet issued by the Department, T4 "Health Advice for Travellers", copies are available in the Library. If more specific advice is needed, action may include addition of a special message to the DH "Health Advice for Travellers" on the Prestel network, and similarly by the travel advice unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, which is received by many travel agents; issuing a press statement; alerting the Association of British Travel Agents (ABTA) which will then relay the information to travel agents; or, in the case of a major outbreak which makes travel to a destination unwise, the Chief Medical Officer would consider issuing a public warning.

Septic Arthritis

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many registered cases of septic arthritis there have been in the United Kingdom over the last five years broken down by district health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Information on registrations of this condition are not held centrally. The table shows the estimated number of cases of septic arthritis treated in national health service hospitals in each regional health authority in England for the last five available years. The numbers of treatments are too small to make reliable estimates at district level.

"Who Cares?"

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what contribution her Department made to the "World in Action" programme, "Who Cares?" broadcast on 30 November.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Care Leavers

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will now review local authority support for young care leavers.

Mr. Yeo: We are monitoring how local authorities are exercising their powers and duties under the Children Act 1989. A report will be presented to Parliament in the new year.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) physically disabled and (b) sensorily disabled people are employed in her Department; and what percentage they are of the total work force.

Mr. Sackville: At 7 December 1992, the latest figures available, the Department employed 74 people who were registered disabled, of whom 37—0·7 per cent. of the work force—are known to have physical disabilities and 13—0·3 per cent.—to have sensory disabilities. In addition, a number of staff have a disability but are not registered disabled.

Child Care Facilities

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she will take to give further encouragement to employers to provide child care facilities for employees' children.

Mr. Yeo: It is for employers to consider the business case for providing a child care service, to help recruit, retain and support the career development of the work force.

The new review duty, introduced by the Children Act 1989, provides a legislative framework for local child care plans, which involve all local interests, including employers and parents, in looking at the existing child care services and identifying priorities for future expansion.

The Department of Health is spending £1½ million over three years starting in 1992-93 to pump prime expansion of child care services for school age children. The Employment Department is planning to spend up to £45 million over three years starting in 1993-94 through training and enterprise councils in promoting child care for school age children.

Community Care

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to ensure that users of community care provisions are enabled to have a genuine choice of services after April.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State intends to issue a statutory direction requiring local authorities to place someone assessed as needing residential care into the accommodation of their choice, subject to practical conditions such as cost, availability and suitability. The statutory direction will also make it clear that authorities should use their discretion in a way which respects users' wishes when arranging the provision of any community care service.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when her Department will issue the guidance referred to in paragraph 3.31 of the policy guidance, "Community Care in the Next Decade and Beyond", on the power of local authorities to make discretionary charges for welfare services under section 17 of the Health and Social Services and Social Security Adjudications Act 1983.

Mr. Yeo: We intend to issue guidance before April 1993.

Private Ambulance Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations her Department has received in the last five years on the regulation of private ambulance services; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have, from time to time, received letters from hon. Members and from the public. In each case the response has been that private ambulance services and their staff are not subject to any specific statute or regulation. It is for the prospective purchaser of private ambulance services to satisfy themselves that operators are competent to provide the required service.

Dr. Kypros Loucas

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to investigate allegations of professional misconduct by Dr. Kypros Loucas while he was working at Horton hospital in Epsom, Surrey, and the circumstances in which he was appointed to the post; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what plans she has to review the powers available to the Mental Health Act Commission; and if she will make a statement;

(3) when her Department first became aware of the Mental Health Act Commission's concerns over possible breaches of the Mental Health Act 1983 by Dr. Kypros Loucas while he was employed at Broadmoor hospital; what representations her Department received from the commission on Dr. Loucas's activities at Broadmoor hospital; and if she will make a statement;

(4) what plans she has to review the effectiveness of the Mental Health Act 1983 following reports by the Mental Health Act Commission on the treatment of patients at Broadmoor hospital.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many past Secretaries of State were approached through their private offices about Dr. Kypros Loucas and his treatment of psychiatric patients;

(2) if she will now set up an independent inquiry into the activities of Dr. Kypros Loucas with a view to publishing a report;

(3) to how many internal Department of Health inquiries Dr. Kypros Loucas consultant psychiatrist has been subject;

(4) what action has been taken against Dr. Kypros Loucas following the Mental Health Act Commission's reports to her Department.

Mr. Yeo: The Mental Health Act Commission first expressed concern to the Department about compliance by Dr. Loucas with part IV of the Mental Health Act in 1985. This and subsequent reports by the commission were followed up by the Department with local management at Broadmoor hospital and with the local hospital board. Ministers were involved as necessary and the commission was kept fully informed of the action being taken, which concluded with Dr. Loucas's early retirement from Broadmoor in 1989. In that year the commission stated in its third biennial report:

"the Department of Health has remedied the situation in a way which fully satisfied the Commission's insistent call for official action".

It is not clear that the reported events demonstrate an inadequacy in the Mental Health Act 1983 or in the powers of the Mental Health Act Commission, but we are ready to consider any proposals for changes in this area. We do not believe that a general inquiry into these matters would serve a useful purpose, but we are considering whether any steps need to be taken on particular issues raised.

The decision to employ Dr. Loucas at Horton hospital was taken by the Riverside health authority. We have received a copy from the authority of the report of its internal inquiry into the death of a patient at Horton in 1990 and we are considering urgently whether this calls for any further action.

Questions relating to the professional conduct and competence of doctors are for the General Medical Council to consider. We have drawn the council's attention to the allegations about Dr. Loucas and will do all that we can to assist any investigation that it may decide to undertake.

Medical Manpower Standing Advisory Committee

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects the Medical Manpower Standing Advisory Committee to make its first report.

Dr. Mawhinney: I am pleased to announce that the Medical Manpower Standing Advisory Committee has completed its first report. It is published today and copies have been placed in the Library.

Long-term manpower planning is an important issue for health care and it is not too soon to be thinking about the manpower requirements for the next century. We are grateful to Professor Campbell, the chairman, and to the members of the committee for their consideration of a wide range of issues. We will be studying their recommendations very carefully.

Sunderland Health Authority

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) administrative, (b) nursing and (c) other staff were employed by Sunderland health authority in 1987 and 1991.

Dr. Mawhinney: The figures, where available, are given in the table.

	Whole-time equivalent
	1987	1991

Notes:

1. Excludes medical and dental staff.
2. Includes agency nurses.
3. Source: Non-medical Manpower Census.
4. 1991 figures for administrative and clerical and other non-professional staff are not available centrally for Sunderland district health authority.

Bradford Hospitals Trust

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from the Bradford hospitals trust to approve the closure of Bradford royal infirmary, Woodlands and Bierley hospitals; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have received no such representations.

Tobacco

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the dimensions of the warning notices required by section 4 of the Children and Young Persons (Protection from Tobacco) Act 1991.

Dr. Mawhinney: In the light of consultation on the draft regulations, we shall shortly be making regulations which will provide that the notice for display at premises where tobacco is sold is to be not less than 297 mm × 420 mm (A3), and the lettering is to be not less than 36 mm high. The notice to be affixed to cigarette vending machines is to be not less than 60 mm × 100 mm, and the lettering not less than 6 mm high.

TRANSPORT

Transport Council

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the result of the Transport Council held in Brussels on 7 and 8 December.

Mr. MacGregor: The Transport Council met in Brussels on 7 and 8 December. There was constructive discussion of a very full agenda on aviation, maritime and inland transport issues. On the outstanding measures needed for completion of the single market in transport, full agreement was reached on the regulation on airport slot allocation, thus completing the single market in aviation; and good progress was made on the liberalisation of road haulage cabotage. This will be discussed further at an additional special Transport Council on 21 December. There was also unanimous agreement on a directive to ensure better information when dangerous and polluting goods are carried into and out of Community sea ports.

Airport Slot Allocation

The Council agreed a regulation on airport slot allocation to come into force early in 1993. It will put into place a fair and uniform system for allocating slots at Community airports. The regulation will provide preferential treatment for new entrants on intra-Community routes, and also introduces stricter penalties on airlines that fail to use their slots. The Council will review the operation of the regulation after three years. The completion of the single market in aviation will assist air travellers across Europe by promoting competition and choice.

Aviation External Relations

Useful preliminary discussions took place on the Commission's communication on aviation external relations. There was general agreement that a case-by-case examination will be needed before the Community negotiates collectively with any third country. The forthcoming Danish presidency agreed to take this forward.

Air Traffic Control Issues

The Council emphasised the importance of co-operation by the Commission with Eurocontrol and the European Civil Aviation Conference (ECAC). It called for the adoption as soon as possible of the Commission's proposal for a directive on standards for air traffic management (ATM) equipment and systems. It encouraged the Commission to ensure the continuation of the EURET research programme and to make provisions for research to support the development of the future ATM system for Europe, in close co-operation with ECAC and Eurocontrol.

State Aids Resolution

The presidency proposed a draft resolution urging tighter control of state aids in the single market for transport, to which we have attached great importance. This is a matter which lies within the Commission's competence, and the resolution was supported by the Commission. There was support from most member states. But there were objections in principle from certain member states so it was not possible to adopt the resolution. I am hopeful that the matter will be pursued by the Danish presidency.

Road haulage fiscal harmonisation and cabotage

Further discussions took place on these linked and difficult issues. Good progress was made, but without conclusion. In view of the importance and urgency of these items the Council agreed to adjourn and resume discussions at a further meeting on 21 December, in order to reach agreement before the end of the year because the current transitional scheme runs out on 1 January 1993.

Inland waterways

Agreement was reached on a Commission mandate on the opening of negotiations with Danubian countries on inland waterways.

Transit with Slovenia

The Commission reported on the negotiations for a Community transit agreement with Slovenia. The Council was not satisfied that an agreement could yet be initialled.

EC tranport infrastructure funding

The draft regulation to succeed the current infrastructure funding regulation had already received political agreement at the October Council. The December Council confirmed this and agreed to re-consult the European Parliament given the considerable differences between this text and the Commission's original proposal.

Dangerous goods at sea

We succeeded in getting unanimous agreement, after three years of Council deliberation, for a directive concerning the carriage of dangerous or polluting goods at sea. This will allow the Community to set in hand a practical scheme compatible with international law, to achieve a better flow of information about the carriage of dangerous and polluting goods into and out of Community ports.

Positive measures for shipping

The Council discussed ways of improving the competitiveness of Community fleets to guide the Commission's future work in this area. Three points were made in particular: state aids should not be mandatory; and there was widespread concern that aids distort competition, especially in some countries which could not afford to grant them, and that manning arrangements should be kept as flexible as possible.

Maritime external relations

The Council agreed the presidency paper which encourages the Commission to produce a strategy and working arrangements for Community action on external relations for shipping.

Maritime safety

There was a useful general discussion on the Community's approach to maritime safety during which the United Kingdom emphasised the importance of achieving the right standards on ferry stability.

Shipping liberalisation

The Commission presented a report which shows that some member states are not complying fully with their obligations under the regulation liberalising shipping between member states and third countries.

White Paper

Commissioner Van Miert presented the wide-ranging Commission White Paper "The Future Development of the Common Transport Policy". The Danish presidency will take forward discussion of the paper.

Rail Freight

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take the legislative or other steps necessary to place an immediate moratorium on the rates British Rail charges to its freight customers as part of the preparations for privatisation of British Rail's freight operations.

Mr. Freeman: The rates British Rail charges to freight customers are not matters that the Government can control. The Government intend to bring forward legislation under which a regulator would be appointed to supervise track charges to railway operators.

Nuclear Material

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce legislation to enforce the British Railways Board "List of Dangerous Goods Class 7: radioactive material", 1977 edition.

Mr. Freeman: This issue is under consideration by the Department as part of the safety regime to be put in place following the privatisation of British Rail.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent changes have been made to the Chicago convention to cover the air freight of nuclear material.

Mr. Norris: None. Annex 18 to the convention already lays down provisions for the safe transport by air of dangerous goods, including radioactive material.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department has regarding accidents involving (a) air transport, (b) sea or water course transport, (c) road transport and (d) rail transport of nuclear materials in the European Community since 1979.

Mr. Norris: Details of accidents in the United Kingdom and their radiological consequences are given in National Radiological Protection Board reports M206, M230 and M310, commissioned jointly by the Department of Transport and the Health and Safety Executive.

The Department does not hold details of accidents in other member states of the European Community.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what petitions he has received in his position as President of the European Council of Transport Ministers relating to the risks associated with the transportation of radioactive materials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: No such petitions have been received.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all published and unpublished reports, commissioned and retained by his Department on the safety and the security of the transport of nuclear materials, and place in the Library those not otherwise available.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The following safety studies have been commissioned by the Department:

Radiation exposure from the normal movement of irradiated fuel elements by road and rail from Magnox power stations: March 1983

Review of the radiological consequence resulting from accidents and incidents during transportation in and from the United Kingdom: December 1984

Derived limits for surface contamination of transport packages: February 1987

The radiological impact of releases from a Magnox fuel flask damages by a hypothetical fire in the summit tunnel: December 1988

Review of the radiological consequences resulting from accidents and incidents involving the transport of radioactive materials in the United Kingdom from 1964 to 1988: March 1990

Radiological impact of the normal transport of radioactive materials by air: March 1990

Transport of radioactive materials between the United Kingdom mainland and gas and oil platforms in the North sea: March 1990

Radiological consequences resulting from accidents and incidents involving the transport of radioactive materials in the United Kingdom—1989 review: July 1990

Radiological consequences resulting from accidents and incidents involving the transport of radioactive materials in the United Kingdom—1990 review: July 1991

All the above studies were carried out by the National Radiological Protection Board.

In addition, the Department of Energy commissioned a confidential security study in 1980 on the consequences of a terrorist attack on an irradiated fuel flask.

I will place in the Library copies of the listed safety reports that are not already there.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those United Kingdom ports which have been used for the transportation of separated plutonium since January 1989.

Mr. Norris: Radioactive material transported in approved packages may be moved through any port. Consignors are under no regulatory obligation to give this information to the Department.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the research undertaken at his Department's Road Research Laboratory since its inception has been devoted to safety assessment of the transportation of nuclear materials by road.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None: such research is the responsibility of the consignors.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information on the import and export of plutonium port authorities are required to provide to his Department.

Mr. Norris: None.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he or his officials have had with the European Transport Commissioner or his officials on the import and export of nuclear materials into (a) the European Community and (b) the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacGregor: None.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with his German counterparts in regard to the air freighting of plutonium fuel from Germany to Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: No discussions have taken place.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what categories of information relating to the transport of plutonium it is his Department's practice not to publish.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is a decision for the consignors whether or not to publish operational details of plutonium transport.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what occasions his Department has proposed a preference since June 1986 on the optimum mode of transport for plutonium.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No such preferences have been expressed.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration the Health and Safety Executive has given since 1991 over the transportation of (a) plutonium, (b) uranium, (c) spent nuclear fuel and (d) nuclear waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The safe transport of radioactive material is a matter for the Department of Transport.

Road Salting

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what monitoring and evaluation Her Majesty's Government have carried out of alternatives to the use of salt for de-icing of roads and pathways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department has commissioned the Transport Research Laboratory to conduct research into alternative de-icing chemicals—including salt with corrosion inhibitors.

The research project has the objective of assessing the performance of alternative de-icing chemicals in relation to their effectiveness as a de-icer, corrosive effect on steels and concrete, skid resistance properties, contamination of the environment, handling and storage characteristics and cost effectiveness.

The project has already assessed five principle alternative de-icers, comprising: calcium chloride, calcium magnesium acetate, urea, glycol and potassium acetate. The original project has been extended to allow completion of research on corrosion inhibitors following an American study on salt additives—commissioned by the United States strategic highways research program. An interim report is scheduled for the end of this month, with a final report due in June 1993.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department has on the affect of salt used during cold weather on (a) trees, (b) grass verges and (c) concrete; what research his Department has commissioned or carried out on these matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The latest information available to the Department about the effects of de-icing salt on trees and other vegetation is contained in the Forestry Commission bulletin "De-icing Salt Damage to Trees and Shrubs", which was published in 1991. It was commissioned by the Department of the Environment and compiled in consultation with the Department of Transport's environment branch, with reference to earlier Transport and Road Research Laboratory studies on roadside vegetation and the DOT's winter maintenance statement of service and code of practice.

The Forestry Commission is now following up with a survey of salt damage to roadside trees in London, which is partially sponsored by the Department of Transport. A preliminary report has been issued and the final report is due for publication later this month and will be considered by my Department.

The Transport Research Laboratory is also currently carrying out research on alternative de-icing chemicals, as described in my reply to the hon. Member's earlier question today.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate for each of the next 10 years how much will be spent on repairing existing motorway carriages and bridges; if he will estimate what proportion of this expenditure he expects to be attributable partly or wholly to salt penetration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The amounts to be spent on repairing trunk motorway carriageways and bridges will depend on the funds available and the continuous reappraisal of priorities for maintenance, renewal and reconstruction in the light of the latest survey and inspection data.

There is no evidence that carriageway repairs will be required as a consequence of salt penetration, but the Department currently estimates that about £700 million will need to be spent over the 10 years from 1993-94 onwards for preventive treatment and repair of concrete bridges on motorways and all-purpose trunk roads to deal with problems associated with salt penetration. This figure could vary depending on the solutions adopted.

The work is being carried out as part of a strategic 15-year bridge rehabilitation programme which is being planned and programmed to ensure that work is carried out at the appropriate time to produce the most cost-effective solutions, and which includes assessment and strengthening of older bridges to current standards as well as work to safeguard bridges against deterioration.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by grade, the number of staff employed by DVLA, Swansea.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The number of staff employed at DVLA, Swansea, on 30 November 1992 was as follows:

	Number
Grade 3	1
Grade 5	3
Senior medical officer	1
Grade 6	6
Medical officer	9
Grade 7	24
Senior executive officer	37
Higher executive officer	117
Executive officer	250
Administrative officer	797
Administrative assistant	1,548
Support, secretarial and technical	288
Total	3,081

Red Route

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the change in the rate of accidents on the pilot red route since its inception; and what are the figures for comparable routes in adjacent London boroughs.

Mr. Norris: Casualties in the pilot corridor have fallen by some 17 per cent. in the 18 months since the start of the scheme, compared with the equivalent period leading up to the launch in January 1991. The latest figures for the boroughs through which the pilot route runs show an average reduction of about 7 per cent.

Airports

Mr. Hasselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress made in the work of the RUCATSE—runway capacity in the south-east—working group on runway capacity in the south-east.

Mr. Norris: The RUCATSE working group has made good progress in its study of the wider implications of the provision of additional runway capacity to serve the south-east. Starting from the 10 sites identified by the Civil Aviation Authority in its report CAP570, four—Bristol/Filton, Bristol/Lulsgate, Bournemouth and Southampton—were judged unlikely to make a substantial contribution to meeting demand and were therefore remitted for further consideration by the group's regional airports sub-group. Further work is being undertaken to assess the contribution that Lydd and Manston could make; and Gatwick, Heathrow, Luton and Stansted are now subject to a detailed examination, covering the notional runway alignments identified in CAP570 and others, environmental impacts, noise and surface access issues. In addition, the promoters of an off-shore airport in the Thames estuary—Marinair—have made a presentation to RUCATSE and have undertaken to do some further detailed work. It is intended that a report on Marinair will be submitted to me in parallel with the final RUCATSE report.

RUCATSE hopes to complete its work by next summer in the form of a report which can be expected to set out the advantages and disadvantages of development at a number of sites. I intend to publish the report as soon as it is ready and at that stage there will be a full public consultation on the group's findings. It will ultimately be for promoters rather than Government to make specific proposals, which would in turn be subject to the normal planning processes.

Ship Design

Mr. Lidlington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Government expects to publish its response to the report "Safety Aspects of Ship Design" from the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology.

Mr. Norris: The Government response to the Select Committee on Science and Technology's report was published today. Copies of the response have been placed in the Libraries.

Vehicle Testing Stations

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the current performance of vehicle testing stations; and what criteria he uses to evaluate their performance.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend monitors the performance of the vehicle inspectorate against financial and service quality targets quarterly. The performance of individual testing stations is a management matter for the chief executive.

Minicabs

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to enforce registration and training upon minicabs in London; if he will set a national vocational qualification to achieve this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: I am currently considering the future structure of the minicab trade in London in the light of a working party report on the safety of users of taxis and minicabs in London which was presented to me in July. In the course of my review, I have met with a range of organisations whose views I am taking fully into account. I hope to make an announcement shortly.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many hours delay have been reported on the Severn bridge since 15 November due to repair work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Emergency repairs to the anti-skid surfacing made it necessary to restrict westbound traffic to one lane only from the afternoon of 30 November until early morning on 4 December. Delays of up to two hours at peak times were reported. There were much shorter delays on 5 December when a lane was again closed for the work to be completed.

There have been no other delays to traffic due to repair work during the period in question.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward proposals whereby tolls on the Severn bridge will be suspended while travellers are delayed due to road closures because of repairs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Severn Bridges Act 1992 allows the concessionaire, at his discretion, to suspend tolls. We have no plans to seek amendments to the relevant provisions. Recent repairs to the bridge took less than one week to complete.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce proposals to amend the Severn Bridges Act 1992 in respect of the level of tolls.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. The toll levels in the Act were fully debated in Parliament. The current tolls are contributing directly to the provision of the much needed second Severn bridge.

SCOTLAND

School Inspections

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number and dates of Her Majesty's inspectorate school inspections in each primary and secondary school in Scotland over the last 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is extensive. A copy of it has been placed in the Library. It refers only to inspections of primary and secondary schools which led to published reports since publication started in 1983. The lists do not include inspections of nursery, special or independent schools, colleges of further education or colleges of education which led to published reports within the same period; nor do they include the further inspections conducted 12 to 18 months after each full inspection to follow up the recommendations contained in the published report. In addition, visits have taken place on a regular basis to educational institutions for a range of other purposes including follow-up to specific inquiries, gathering evidence for published reports on various aspects of learning and teaching, monitoring implementation of curricular advice, and the incorporation of further education colleges.

Cunninghame District Council

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will compensate Cunninghame district council because of the error in calculating the authority's non-domestic rate income for 1991-92.

Mr. Lang: Yes. I propose to make an ex-gratia payment of £250,000 to Cunninghame district council towards the additional interest costs which it has incurred, pending an adjustment of revenue support grant, as a result of the fact that, in estimating the council's non-domestic rate income in respect of 1991-92, my Department used incorrect rateable valuation data. The council has accepted my offer of this payment.

Parliamentary approval to this new expenditure will be sought in a supplementary estimate for the revenue support grants, Scotland vote—class XV, vote 20. Pending that approval, this urgent expenditure will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the 1993-94 grant-aided expenditure figures for each Scottish local authority.

Mr. Lang: The GAE figure for each local authority for 1993-94 is set out in the table. Each authority's allocation of the GAE total has been determined having regard to the client group methodology which is agreed with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities in the distribution committee of the working party on local government finance. The table excludes figures for urban programme GAE which is not allocated to individual authorities. The addition of this amount—£63·255 million—brings the GAE total to the previously announced sum of £5,086·4 million.

Conifers (River Pollution)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement regarding the recent finding of a committee of the Forestry Commission on a link between conifer trees and river acidification.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 7 December]: None of the Forestry Commission's committees has made a recent finding of this kind.

An expert workshop jointly sponsored by the Forestry Commission and the Department of the Environment concluded in June 1990 that the primary cause of surface water acidification was the deposition of airborne sulphur and nitrogen pollutants, but that there was also an association between trees and acidification resulting from the effectiveness of trees in scavenging these airborne pollutants. Whether the latter phenomenon would result in increased surface water acidification depended, however, on the sensitivity of the geology and soil in any given catchment area.

The members of the Forestry Commission's north Scotland regional advisory committee recently considered this and other scientific evidence presented to them in the course of considering planting grant applications over which objections had been raised on environmental grounds. They advised the commissioners that, in their opinion, there was sufficient doubt about the effect that tree planting on the specific sites concerned would have on surface water acidification as to prevent their recommending that the applications should be approved at this stage. In the light of this advice, the Forestry Commissioners have decided to delay taking a decision on these applications pending further monitoring of the sensitivity of the sites to further acid inputs from the atmosphere.

Health Spending

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much of the planned spending on health for 1993-94 will be spent on promotion of health.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 8 December]: The responsibility for allocating resources to health promotion rests with health boards.

In addition, the Health Education Board for Scotland received resources totalling £6·441 million in 1992-93. The board will shortly be informed of its allocation for 1993-94.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much he expects to save on the 1993-94 health budget from the 1·5 per cent. ceiling on health workers' pay increases.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 8 December]: There will be no saving on the 1993-94 budget for the national health service in Scotland as a consequence of the ceiling of 1·5 per cent. on pay increases for national health service staff. The effect of this ceiling will be to free resources for direct patient services and investment in new hospitals and clinics.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much of the planned provision for health in 1993-94 will be spent on implementing the patients charter.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 8 December]: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made it clear on launching the citizens charter that charters would be taken forward within existing resources. Thus there is no earmarked budget within resources for health in 1993-94 for the continued implementation of the patients charter: all parts of the national health service in Scotland will deploy their allocated resources to develop services in accordance with charter principles.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a breakdown of the planned £744 per head spending on health in Scotland, showing how much will be allocated to (a) introduction of trust status for those units which have successfully applied, (b) management and administration of trusts, implementation of the patients charter and (c) promotion of health and illness prevention.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 8 December]: It is not possible to provide the analysis requested.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for every health authority (a) the total number of hospital beds and (b) the number of acute hospital beds as at March 1991.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 8 December]: The information requested is shown in the table. The table shows information on bed complement. This is the number of beds approved by health boards. Beds in day bed units, borrowed beds and temporary beds are excluded.

Health Service Trusts

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much of the planned provision for health in 1993-94 will be spent on the introduction of trusts.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 8 December]: Spending in 1993-94 on the introduction of trusts will depend on the number of expressions of interest in trust status and the number of applications which are subsequently approved.

Abortion

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many NHS hospitals in Scotland providing day-care abortion services are offering early medical abortion services in the first nine weeks of pregnancy with mifepristone and prostaglandin.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 9 December]: From April to December 1991, five hospitals performed early medical abortions in the first nine weeks of pregnancy with mifepristone, and with or without prostaglandin.

Forestry Commission Land

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the Forestry Commission lands in Scotland already sold for which no access agreements have been concluded.

This list does not include those woodlands which were sold before the arrangements for securing continued public access to Forestry Commission woodlands after sale were introduced in October 1991, nor those sales which were too far advanced at that time to be included for consideration under those arrangements.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages Councils

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will place in the Library a copy of the research commissioned by her Department on the effect of the abolition of wages councils.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There has been no recent research into the effects of abolition of wages councils. However, in the early 1980s the Department published research into six councils, five of which were abolished by Labour, and copies will be placed in the Library, as soon as this can be arranged.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations she has received from people in Wales regarding the abolition of wages councils; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no separate information available about representations received from people in different parts of Great Britain.

Disabled Trainees

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make it her policy to ring-fence money for training and enterprise councils to secure specialist equipment to assist disabled trainees with their placements.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The funding arrangements between the Employment Department and TECs take into account the higher costs incurred in providing support arrangements, for example, specialist equipment.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to change these arrangements which give TECs the flexibility to meet the needs of individual providers and trainees as they arise.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make it her policy to instruct training and enterprise councils to give guaranteed training placements to all unemployed disabled people.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Under employment training, people with disabilities who are unemployed qualify for places regardless of the length of their unemployment and are included in the aim group. People with disabilities will have a priority for places in training for work, to be introduced in April 1993. Under youth training, the Government extend their guarantee of a place to those young people who are aged over 18 years who were not previously able to join the programme because of disability or ill-health, or who had to leave the programme for the same reasons and are seeking re-entry.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will instruct training and enterprise councils to undertake local needs surveys on an annual basis in order to ascertain numbers of disabled potential trainees.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) are required to assess the training needs of their local area each year in consultation with other local interests including the Employmnent Service. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State ensures that, in particular, the needs of people with disabilities are taken into account before a TEC's annual business plan is agreed.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) physically disabled and (b) sensorily disabled people are employed in her Department; and what percentage they are of the total work force.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not available in the form requested, but 1,964 registered disabled people —3·3 per cent. of the total work force—were employed in July 1992, the latest date for which figures are available. The Department also employs other people with disabilities who have chosen not to register.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what unspent revenues TECs had at the end of 1991-92; and what percentage of their overall budget this represented.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is unable to respond on behalf of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales, who now have responsibility for the delivery of programmes in those areas.

TECs in England are required, under the operating agreement, to produce audited accounts within four months of the end of the financial year.

These accounts reveal the total operating surplus as at the end of the financial year and on a cumulative basis; however, this information is not published as a percentage of the overall budget.

The accounts for the financial year ending 31 March 1992 are now in the public domain and available from individual TECs.

The need for this information on an aggregated basis has been recognised and the format of the Employment Department appropriation account for 1993-94 onwards has been amended to take this into account.

Trade Unions

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement about the future of the schemes which subsidise trade union ballots and training for trade union officials.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have reviewed the operation of the trade union ballot funding scheme, which allows unions to reclaim certain costs associated with secret postal ballots, and the trade union education and training grant, which supports training for trade union officials and representatives.

The ballot funding scheme was set up in 1980 to encourage the voluntary practice of secret balloting at a time when there were no statutory requirements for unions to ballot their members before calling strikes or when electing their leaders. Since then, there have been major changes in industrial relations law and practice.

Secret ballots of union members on the major issues affecting their interests are now generally accepted and in the most important respects are required by law. The scheme now operates largely as a public subsidy for ballots which unions are required to carry out to meet their obligations under the law. The Government therefore believe that the time has come to bring the scheme to an end.

The trade union education and training grant was first paid in 1976 and has subsequently been renewed on an annual basis. It was intended to provide training for union officials to ensure that they were well qualified to carry out their collective bargaining duties, with a view to improving industrial relations and reducing strikes. Industrial relations have improved greatly, and strikes are now at their lowest level since records began. At the same time, fewer than 50 per cent. of employees now have their pay determined, directly or indirectly, by negotiations between employers and trade unions. More and more employees negotiate their pay directly with their employer on an individual basis, taking account of performance and skills. In these circumstances, the Government believe that there is now no justification for continuing to support this training from public funds.

However, I have decided against immediate abolition of these schemes. Funding for both schemes will therefore be phased out over three years to allow trade unions time to find alternative sources of finance for these activities.

In 1993-94, the Government will meet the cost of 75 per cent. of each qualifying claim under the ballot funding scheme, and the trade union education and training grant will be set at 75 per cent. of the 1992-93 per capita figure. In 1994-95 these levels of support will be reduced to 50 per cent. and in 1995-96 they will be reduced to 25 per cent. Both schemes will cease to operate from 1 April 1996.

DEFENCE

Used Tyres and Waste Oil

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those defence establishments which make a practice of disposing of used tyres and waste oil by burning into the atmosphere; what effect he estimates this practice has on the environment; and what steps he intends to take to eliminate this practice.

Mr. Aitken: Used tyres and work oil are disposed of not by burning but in accordance with the duty of core requirements relating to waste embodied in the Environmental Protection Act 1990 (EPA), through contracts with appropriately qualified contractors. The only exceptions to this policy are small amounts of both materials which may be burnt during fire-fighting training. This is carried out under strictly controlled conditions and is permitted under the exemptions granted to my Department from the statutory nuisance provisions of the EPA.

Reactor Cores

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) Official Report, 27 November, column 895, he will set out the route used to transport the nuclear core from Rosyth to Sellafield.

Mr. Aitken: For security reasons, it is not our practice to comment on the routes used in the movement of nuclear submarine reactor cores.

Channel Islands (War Records)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many records from the small number of files relating to the wartime Nazi occupation of the Channel islands that have been held by his Department on extended closure have been passed to prosecuting authorities in the United Kingdom or in Germany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has been the practice of the Ministry of Defence to make all papers, whether open or closed, available to any official prosecuting authority investigating alleged war crimes.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the small number of files relating to the wartime Nazi occupation of the Channel islands, that have been held by the Ministry of Defence on extended closure, relate in any way to allegations of war crimes or atrocities that may have been committed by (a) United Kingdom citizens and (b) non-United Kingdom citizens on the island of Alderney; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The small number of papers relating to the wartime Nazi occupation of the Channel islands still held by my Department remain properly closed under the provisions of section 5(1) of the Public Records Acts of 1958 and 1967.

It has been the practice of successive Governments not to disclose the contents of records which are so withheld from public release, but the papers will be made available to any official prosecuting authority investigating alleged war crimes.

Royal Naval Stores Depot, Eaglescliffe

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if a decision has been taken on the proposal to relocate 182 Ministry of Defence headquarters' posts from the royal naval stores depot at Eaglescliffe in Cleveland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department has consulted very thoroughly on the proposal to colocate 182 headquarters posts currently at Eaglescliffe with the integrated headquarters of the new Naval Support Command in the Bath region. During the course of the consultation process I visited the establishment to see the facilities there and to hear the views of management, staff and trade unions. I have studied very carefully the helpful comments and views expressed by them, hon. Members and others. I have concluded that the proposal to move these posts in 1995-96, which is expected to produce net savings around £12 million over 10 years, represents the best value for money for the taxpayer as well as producing real operational benefits. Discussions will now take place with the trades unions on implementation of the moves in 1995-96. The royal naval stores depot itself will not be affected.

Redundancies

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current position on redundancies in the (a) Royal Navy, (b) Army and (c) Royal Air Force; and if he will make a further statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I announced the second phase of the Royal Navy's redundancy programme in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Wimbledon (Dr. Goodson-Wickes) on 3 June 1992, Official Report, columns 568-69. A total of 436 officers and 836 ratings have now been selected for redundancy. The vast majority are volunteers although, regrettably, it has been necessary to select 69 officers and 80 ratings who did not put their names forward. All individuals have been notified and will leave between 1 April and 30 November 1993. The need for a third phase is under careful consideration.

For the Army, as foreshadowed in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) on 8 July 1992, Official Report, column 185, a total of 1,311 officers and 5,150 soldiers will be selected for redundancy in 1993-94. I am pleased to say that all the 5,150 soldiers to be selected have volunteered for redundancy. Almost 60 per cent. of the officers will also be volunteers, but it will unfortunately be necessary to select 623 officers for compulsory redundancy. All those declared redundant will be notified on 25 February 1993. The size of the third phase for 1994-95 will be considered in due course.

The first tranche of the RAF redundancy scheme that I announced in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) on 22 May 1992, Official Report, column 292, was oversubscribed by applicants and no compulsory redundancies are necessary to meet the full target of 750 places in 1993-94. In addition, some 210 individuals who also volunteered for redundancy have indicated their willingness to leave before 31 March 1993. The size of the second tranche of the scheme in 1994-95 will be reviewed next year in the light of the latest manpower forecasts.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Unconventional Medicine

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, what consideration his Department has given to COST project B4—"Unconventional Medicine", originated in Switzerland; and if he will make it his policy to consider supporting any formal proposal submitted to the United Kingdom Government.

Mr. Jackson: My Department has recently been notified that COST project B4 is now formally open for signature. The proposal has been circulated and we have already received a response from an interested party. As with all COST projects, the United Kingdom will need to be satisfied that prospective participants will be able to fulfil their commitment for the full term of the project before undertaking to sign the memorandum of understanding.

Royal Family

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what publicity services relevant to the royal family are covered by the Central Office of Information; when COI became responsible for this expenditure; and from what sources it was financed before it became a charge on the COI.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Central Office of Information currently provides press liaison facilities to the royal household under class XVIII vote 15.

The chief executive of the Central Office of Information informs me that he has established that such services have been provided since financial year 1948-49 but that without disproportionate cost he has been unable to establish what arrangements, if any, existed before that year.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Retrials

Dame Angela Rumbold: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what new arrangements have been put in place to ensure that section 8 of the Criminal Appeals Act 1968 is complied with so that retrials are listed within two months.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No new arrangements have been made by the Lord Chancellor's Department because I am satisfied with the existing procedures by which the Registrar of Criminal Appeals himself immediately notifies the chief clerk of the Crown court centre concerned of retrials ordered by the Court of Appeal and of the necessity to arraign the defendant within two months. Existing departmental instructions are that defendants in such cases must be arraigned within two months. Listing guidelines to be issued in the new year, which will cover a wide range of subjects, will re-emphasise the necessity of dealing with such cases expeditiously.

Private Prosecutions (Legal Costs)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are the hourly rates which apply to the taxing of legal rates when costs are awarded to individuals who successfully pursue private prosecutions; what account is taken in such cases of the actual rates charged for legal costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are no set hourly rates applied to these cases. Determining officers have to assess what is considered to be reasonably sufficient to compensate the applicant for any expenses properly incurred by him in the proceedings. Thus an order that a private prosecutor's costs be paid from central funds may not be a complete indemnity against all the costs incurred, whatever their nature.

Repossession Proceedings

Mr. Battle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what were the numbers of (a) actions entered for repossession, (b) possession orders made and (c) suspended orders made for the years ended (i) April 1979, (ii) June 1987, (iii) October 1991 and (iv) October 1992 by (x) court circuit in England and Wales and (y) county court in England and Wales.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The 1978-79 and 1986-87 figures are not available. Because of the lengthy nature of the other material, I will separately write to the hon. Member with the information requested and place a copy of the data in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what were the numbers of (a) actions entered for repossession, (b) possession orders made and (c) suspended orders made for (i) November 1991 to 1992 and (ii) May to October 1992, (x) by court circuit in England and Wales and (y) by county court in England and Wales.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Because of the lengthy nature of the material, I will separately write to the hon. Member with the information requested and place a copy of the data in the House of Commons Library.

Domestic Violence

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his oral answer of 30 November, Official Report, columns 19-20, when he is proposing to introduce legislation on the matter of domestic violence; and which organisations he is consulting on this matter.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor is considering the Law Commission's recommendations for reform of the law governing civil remedies for domestic violence in consultation with other interested Departments. He has no immediate plans for legislation but he welcomes any views on the appropriate response to these recommendations.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his oral answer of 30 November, Official Report, columns 19-20, what inquiries his Department is making into the question of domestic violence and its effects on women; and what consultations he has had with law centres on this matter.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor is considering the Law Commission's recommendations for reform of the law governing civil remedies for domestic violence and how they would affect women in consultation with other interested Departments. The Law Commission consulted widely before reporting and the Government have received some further comments since the publication of the Law Commission's recommendations. The Lord Chancellor welcomes any views, including those of law centres, on the appropriate response to these recommendations.

Legal Aid

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are the estimated savings from figures previously projected for 1993-94 of the cuts proposed to expenditure announced in his answer of 12 November, Official Report, columns 863-64, in respect of (a) the reduction of the civil legal aid lower disposable income limit, (b) the increase from one quarter to one third in the contribution taken from income above the lower disposable income limit and below the upper disposable income limit, (c) the proposed changes from 1 April 1993 to green form legal advice and (d) the proposed changes in financial eligibility to criminal legal aid announced in the same parliamentary answer.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government's expenditure plans 1992-93 to 1994-95 for the Lord Chancellor's and Law Officers Departments [Cm. 1910, published 14 February 1992] showed planned expenditure on legal aid in 1993-94 of £885 million. Estimated outturn for 1992-93 is £1100 million. The new plan for 1993-94 is for expenditure of £1285 million. Without the changes to the financial eligibility conditions for civil legal aid and to the level of contributions which were announced on 12 November 1992 [House of Commons Official Report, columns 863-64] expenditure in 1993-94 would have risen by a further £39.5 million and without the changes to legal advice and assistance by a further £3.7 million. I do not expect the changes to criminal legal aid to have a significant effect on expenditure.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will give the timetable for the Lord Chancellor's review of financial eligibility for legal aid following the announcements in his answer of 12 November, Official Report, columns 863-64; what is the current composition of the review team; and on what dates the review team has met since 1 January.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor will shortly issue a consultation paper on changes to criminal legal aid regulations. This consultation will complete the criminal stage of the financial conditions review. The responses to the consultation paper issued at the end of the civil stage of the review indicated that there was no consensus in favour of the proposals put forward. In the light of that, and of the plans for legal aid eligibility generally which were announced on 12 November, the Lord Chancellor has decided that it would not be appropriate to pursue the civil proposals for the time being. The third stage of the review was to have covered financial eligibility for advice and assistance and legal aid in matrimonial cases. Against the current background, including the Lord Chancellor's consideration of the report of the Law Commission on the ground for divorce, he has decided that a separate review of financial eligibility in this area would not be appropriate. The team conducting the review is composed of officials of the Lord Chancellor's Department, who work together on a regular basis.

Domicile Law

Mr. Renton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether, following the representations he has received, he will consider not proceeding with changes in the law of domicile.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Only a few of the representations on the Law Commission report on the law of domicile call for it not to be implemented, and the Government's intention to introduce legislation, which was announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, when he was Attorney-General, Official Report, 17 October 1991, column 177, is unchanged. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor is considering the representations which have been made on specific aspects of the report.

EDUCATION

Private Sector Colleges

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the Higher Education Funding Council funding for private sector colleges.

Mr. Forman: Under the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 the Higher Education Funding Council for England is empowered to fund only universities, higher education corporations and designated institutions. My right hon. Friend does not currently designate new institutions because public funding for them would have to be found at the expense of existing higher education institutions.

Royal Holloway College

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information Royal Holloway college supplied to his Department through the court of the university of London in respect of its financial needs for preservation, refurbishment and reservicing of its grade 1 listed buildings for the period 1989 to 2000.

Mr. Forman: My right hon. Friend has received no financial information about the Royal Holloway college's grade 1 buildings, either from the college or through the court of the university of London. This is a matter for the university of London and the college, involving the Universities Funding Council as necessary. Higher education institutions are autonomous bodies responsible for their own financial affairs.

Engineers

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what studies his Department has carried out to assess future demand by (a) British industry and (b) the teaching profession for (i) engineers in general and (ii) electrical engineers in particular; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: The Department has not carried out a specific study to assess future demand for engineers by British industry or the teaching profession. As announced in the Government's White Paper "Higher Education: Meeting The Challenge" (Cm 114, 1987), the Department participated in the Interdepartmental Review which reported on prospective needs for new graduates in general by industry, commerce and the public services ("Highly Qualified People: Supply and Demand" HMSO 1990). The Engineering Council is currently undertaking a review of the formation of engineers. One part of this review will address needs, demands and supply of engineers, and concentrate on industrial and economic issues. I look forward to the report of this work—expected in spring 1993.

ACCOMMODATION AND WORKS COMMITTEE

Energy Bill

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what steps have been taken to reduce the energy bill for the Palace of Westminster and its precincts.

Mr. Powell: As part of a continuing programme of energy-saving measures in the Palace of Westminster and the parliamentary estate, low-energy light fittings have been installed in many areas. Where these have been installed they have contributed over the past two years to savings of some 65 per cent. in the consumption of electricity. During the same period, over 300 "occupancy sensors" have been installed, which automatically switch off lights when areas are vacated. Old style steam radiators are being replaced by modern low-temperature hot-water radiators. All new radiators are fitted with thermostatic valves; and all pipework, fittings and valves are being insulated to reduce heat loss.

EMPLOYMENT

Redundancy Pay

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the level of the current redundancy payment recoverable from Government funds; and what it would be if it had been increased each year since its introduction by the levels of (a) earnings and (b) prices.

Mr. McLoughlin: The rebate recoverable by employers against statutory redundancy payments was abolished in January 1990.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Claims (Ex-service Personnel)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the implications of the development of commercial agencies which propose to charge fees in order to pursue claims for benefit from ex-service personnel.

Miss Widdecombe: There is nothing to prevent an individual or commercial agency charging a fee to ex-service personnel for the provision of advice on claims for benefit. However, such advice on social security benefits is available free from the Benefits Agency and on war pensions from the War Pensions Directorate and a number of ex-service organisations. It is a matter of personal choice which service is used.

Benefit Disqualification

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of those disqualified from receiving benefit because of dismissal from their jobs were refused benefits for less than the maximum period in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total spent on advertising of the disability living allowances and the disability working allowances (a) before their introduction and (b) in every month since then.

Mr. Scott: The total cost of advertising in the press and on television before the introduction of the new benefits in April was £3,044,909.

The latest figures for advertising month by month since then are in the table.

April	Nil
May	Nil
June	240,740
July	Nil
August	Nil
September	587
October	2,144

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when the chief executive of the Benefits Agency will reply to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford's letter concerning the delay in processing the disability living allowance claim of (a) R. Collumbell, (b) Ms. McVitie, (c) P. Morgan, (d) R. Edwards, (e) B. Siblon, (f) L. Heat and (g) S. Goodwin;

(2) when the chief executive of the Benefits Agency will reply to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford's letter concerning the delay in processing the disability living allowance claim of the people with NI numbers (a) SM290692B, (b) JE542286C, (c) WK555651A, (d) KB331945D, (e) JE466288A, (f) ZW558243D and (g) ZX002165B.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Ms. Joan Ruddock, dated 10 December 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning your correspondence about claims to Disability Living Allowance for R. Collumbell, Ms. McVitie, P. Morgan, R. Edwards, B. Siblon, L. Heat, S. Goodwin and those with NI numbers SM290692B, JE542286C, WK555651A, KB331945D, JE466288A, ZW558243D and ZX002165B.

I am now in a position to confirm that adjudication officers have made decisions on all but one of the claims. The case outstanding is waiting for further evidence from the customer. I have already replied separately, and in greater detail, about each case.

I offer my sincere apologies for any delay in dealing with the claims and also for the delay in replying to your correspondence. My letter of 19 October to all MPs set out the problems we have encountered since the successful launch of the new benefit and the positive steps taken to improve the situation.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Television Licences

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many people were affected by the change in television licence rules for those living in sheltered housing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: This is a matter for which the Department of National Heritage is now responsible. People who had the concession when the regulations were changed in 1988 have kept it. The regulations included a provision which preserved the rights of existing beneficiaries for their lifetime, provided they continued to live in accommodation which would have qualified under the old regulations.

PRIME MINISTER

Agencies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all Next Steps agencies currently operating and all new agencies expected to be introduced before the end of 1993.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply. Full information on all existing agencies and currently announced candidates was included in the Next Steps Annual Review 1992, published on 2 December (Cm. 2111), a copy of which has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

EC Council Agendas

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will ensure that the agenda for each meeting of the EC Council is published in detail at least seven days in advance, and that this information is made available to hon. Members.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply. The monthly business statement printed in the Official Report gives details of all forthcoming Council meetings that month and the items likely to be on the agenda of each.

This generally provides a reliable guide, particularly on the main issues to be discussed, although the final agenda may be subject to change up to the day of the meeting itself.

Council of Europe and WEU

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of the information bulletin on the activities of the United Kingdom delegation to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe and the Assembly of Western European Union.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply. I have done so today.

EC Regional Funds

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has held with his counterparts in the European Council on the possible ways of disbursement of funds under the proposed committee on the regions to be established under the treaty of European Union.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply. Article 198(a) of the Maastricht treaty makes it clear that the Committee of the Regions is an advisory body. It will therefore have no responsibility for disbursing funds.

Disclosure of Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the treaty on European Union in regard to its proposals to increase provisions for prohibition on the disclosure of information from the institutions of the European Community.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply. The Maastricht treaty says nothing on the question of disclosure of information. A declaration adopted at Maastricht calls on the Commission to report to the Council of Ministers on measures designed to improve public access to information held by Community institutions.

In February 1992 the Commission proposed a Council regulation on the security of classified information. As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster told the hon. Member on 7 July, the Government consider the draft regulation in its present form to be unworkable.

Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister what offer of help in Somalia his Government have made in the light of President Bush's offer of military intervention on the subsequent decision of the UN Security Council.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply. We are providing two RAF C130 transport aircraft accompanied by supporting personnel, to the unified military task force in Somalia. On 4 December, my noble Friend Baroness Chalker of Wallasey, the Minister for Overseas Development, announced a further £4·5 million of bilateral humanitarian aid to Somalia for immediate disbursement once conditions permit. This brings United Kingdom aid to Somalia this year to nearly £31·5 million, including our share of EC aid.

Ministers (Legal Costs)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment is made of value for money provided by the level of legal charges to Ministers in connection with personal matters where part of the costs are met from public funds; and if he will make it his policy to limit reimbursement of expenses in such cases to the limits applied by taxing authorities in legal aid cases.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply. The Government are always concerned to ensure value for money in all their activities.

Ministerial Dress

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Prime Minister what advice is given to ministers concerning appropriate standards of dress for Ministers representing Her Majesty's Government in acts of remembrance for service men and women killed on active service.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply. There is no general guidance. The normal practice is for Ministers to follow whatever indication is given by the organisation responsible in each case.

HEALTH

Homeopathic Medicines

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide a comparative average costing of an NHS homeopathic medicine prescription with that of an NHS standard drug prescription.

Mr. Sackville: The net ingredient cost per prescription of a national health service homeopathic medicine prescription in 1991 was £3·33 compared with £6·20 for an NHS standard drug prescription. These figures are for prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors, dispensing doctors and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered in England.

Financial Information Project Systems Ltd.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the payments made to Financial Information Project Systems Ltd. by the West Midlands regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: The question of payments to Financial Information Project Systems Ltd. is currently under investigation by the district auditor.

Paediatric Neurologists

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many paediatric neurologists there are in the West Midlands regional health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: There is one paediatric neurologist in the West Midlands regional health authority, according to the Department of Health's medical and dental census at 30 September 1991.

There is currently a rapid expansion in the number of consultants specialising in paediatrics, of which paediatric neurology is a small sub-specialty. Appointment of medical staff is a matter for local employing authorities.

Dr. Kypros Loucas

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her Department's policy concerning reports from the Mental Health Act Commission on the employment of Dr. K. Loucas as psychiatrist at Broadmoor hospital and Horton hospital; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Members for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) and for Rochdale (Ms. Lynne) on 10 December.

NHS Management Executive

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the production and distribution costs of the NHS Management Executive's annual report for 1990, 1991 and 1992; and how many reports were printed in each of those years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The chief executive of the National Health Service Management Executive, in describing the operations of the £26 billion NHS, produced an annual report at a total cost including design, printing and distribution amounting to £107,241. 35,000 copies of the report were distributed, mostly in the NHS. No report was published in 1990 or 1991.

Private Sector Work

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the updating of the survey of private sector work across the country.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 9 December 1992]: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to research into the number and type of operations carried out in the independent sector. We have no plans at present to commission further research into clinical activity in the independent sector.

Health Promotion

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her proposals for the funding of health promotion among general practitioners from July 1993 showing (i) the cash limit on health promotion, (ii) the maximum income available under her proposed banding scheme, (iii) her assumptions on the number of general practitioners qualifying for payment in each band and (iv) her plans for consultation.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 30 November 1992]: The profession has been consulted, initially on proposals in principle and subsequently on the details of new health promotion arrangements in the general practitioner contract, and has agreed to the proposed new scheme. Action is now in hand to finalise arrangements for implementation. We expect funding of the order of £80 million for Great Britain to be available for the scheme on a full year basis from the totality of resources available for GP remuneration. Payment levels within this will be finalised in the light of further consultation between the Health Departments and the profession once better information is available on take-up of the new scheme.

DEFENCE

Cheshire Regiment

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from members of the Cheshire Regiment serving in Bosnia, whose families are in Germany, regarding the reduction of allowances; and what action he intends to take.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Service personnel based in Germany are paid an allowance in view of the high cost of living there. A similar allowance is not necessary in Bosnia, where food and accommodation charges are waived, but members of the Cheshire Regiment retain a significant element (70 per cent. for married personnel, 40 per cent. for single personnel) of the German allowance in recognition of their continuing financial commitments in Germany.

RAF Chivenor

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many sorties have been flown from RAF Chivenor in each of the last six years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Army Training Land

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what response he has given to the National Audit Office report entitled "Ministry of Defence: Management and Control of Army Training Land"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: By convention, National Audit Office reports are agreed with Departments before publication. The report is to the House of Commons and it is for the Public Accounts Committee (PAC), in the first instance, to decide whether to take evidence from the Department and report further. The Accounting Officer will speak for the Department should the PAC call him to give evidence.

Operation Granby

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 November, Official Report, column 47, what were the original amounts of money expected from each country contributing towards the costs of Operation Granby.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Cash contributions were entirely voluntary and the Government are most grateful for the generosity of those who contributed.

Historic Buildings

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 December, Official Report, column 168, what proposals he has to improve the treatment within and around Bruce's Craigie hall outside Edinburgh.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Craigie hall is an historic building and is subject to regular inspection and maintenance. This is done in agreement with Historic Scotland.

Shropshire Regimental History Museum

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice and assistance he has given to the trustees of the Shropshire regimental history museum following the IRA bombing of Shrewsbury castle.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Shropshire regimental museum in Shrewsbury castle doese not belong to the Ministry of Defence; security advice is therefore the responsibility of the police. Nevertheless, the Ministry of Defence recognises that such museums contain property belonging to regiments and offers to supplement police advice where practicable.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drug Trafficking (Confiscation)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 262, when he expects to secure the £20 million which is still outstanding and which has been ordered to be confiscated under the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986; what proposals he intends to introduce to improve the confiscation procedures of the Act; and what additional guidance will be provided to magistrates courts by his Department.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

The Criminal Justice Bill currently before Parliament, for which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department has lead responsibility, contains measures which will improve the enforcement of confiscation orders. In particular, a county court will be able to appoint receivers, which should facilitate their use, and the debt arising from the non-payment of a confiscation order will not be expunged even if a term of imprisonment in default is served.

That apart, as my right hon. Friend said on 19 October, the realisation of confiscation orders can be an extended process, and where, for example, orders are the subject of appeal or offenders have been given extended time to pay, there will inevitably be some delay before magistrates courts can bring their powers of enforcement to bear. Additional guidance to magistrates courts on the operation of the existing and proposed legislation is under consideration.

President-elect Clinton

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he first knew that inquiries had been made by his Department into whether Mr. Clinton had at some stage applied for United Kingdom citizenship.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) on 9 December, Official Report, columns 662-63, to which I have nothing to add.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who was the most senior official involved in his Department who knew that inquiries were being made to see if Mr. Clinton had at any time applied for United Kingdom citizenship.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The head of information of my Department.

Police (Firearms)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many armed officers are involved in the current action to stop terrorism in London; and if he will make a statement;

(2) where and by whom the decision was taken to allow armed officers to set up road blocks in London; and if he will make a statement.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what constraints have been placed on the use of sub-machine guns and other firearms by the police in setting up road blocks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The decision whether to deploy armed officers in support of police operations is an operational matter and as such falls within the discretion of chief officers. A copy of the Home Office Guidelines for the Police on the Issue and Use of Firearms, which apply in such circumstances, has been placed in the Library. It would not be in the public interest to reveal the number of armed officers deployed in counter-terrorist operations in London.

Crime and Drug Prevention

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what crime prevention and drug prevention initiatives from his Department are presently operating in the Greater Manchester area.

Mr. Jack: The Home Office is currently operating safer cities crime prevention projects in Salford and Rochdale which between them have so far spent £17·6 million in supporting over 2,800 local crime prevention projects.

As part of their response to the Department's initiative on car crime prevention year, Greater Manchester Police have organised and participated in a number of projects, including the promotion of vehicle watch schemes, the distribution of information packs on car security, the setting up of a special police unit to tackle car crime, and the development of an autocrime project aimed at certain secondary schools. In the 12 months ending June 1992 Greater Manchester police reported a fall in the level of car crime.

The Department has encouraged those districts within the Greater Manchester area which have successfully bid for city challenge status—Manchester (Hulme), Bolton and Wigan—to develop crime prevention strategies and programmes as part of their action plans.

Since February of this year we have also operated local drugs prevention teams in Salford and Manchester, which so far, including their efforts for European drugs prevention week in November, have supported 39 local projects and committed some £128,000 in grants.

Betting Shops

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has held with betting shop employees on the extension of their working hours; and with what results.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) on 8 December 1992, Official Report, column 552.

Criminal Justice Act 1991

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to bring into effect the provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 relating to curfew orders and electronic monitoring.

Mr. Jack: Current spending priorities do not permit the early introduction of the arrangements under sections 12 and 13 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 for monitoring curfew orders. Before determining the way forward, I intend first carefully to review and assess the operation of existing community penalties as a whole in the new context created by the Act.

Squatting

Mr. Raymond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to introduce changes to legislation affecting squatting in residential property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: At present, I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave on 17 June 1992, Official Report, columns 522-25, in answer to questions from the hon. Member on this subject. Work is continuing to fulfil the objectives outlined in those questions.

Racial Discrimination

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with other EC member states on introducing legislation against racial discrimination; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government are opposed absolutely to discrimination on grounds of race, and this position is reflected when such matters come up in discussions with our European partners. The legislative arrangements in other member states, however, are a matter for them, taking account of their particular circumstances.

Advisory Council on Race Relations

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names of those he has appointed to his Advisory Council on Race Relations and the organisations they represent; on what matters the council has given recent advice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The membership of the Advisory Council on Race Relations is 22. Membership falls into two categories; individual members appointed for a two-year period by the Home Secretary, and representative members who are nominated by certain designated organisations. The individual members are Miss Salome Asamoah, Mrs. Salma Ahmed, Mr. David Bryan, Mr. Thomas Chan, Mr. Chris Kavaliares, Dr. Zaka Khan, Mr. Ravi Mooneeram, Dr. Dwain Neil, Mr. Shantilal Ruparell, Mr. Iqbal Sacranie, Mr. Tufail Shaheen, Mr. Jack Shieh, Ms. Anesta Weekes and Mr. Ranbir Singh Suri. Representative members are nominated by the Commission for Racial Equality, the TUC, the CBI, the London Boroughs Associations, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, the Association of County Councils, the Association of District Councils and the National Association of Racial Equality Councils.

Recent topics for discussion have included immigration; race relations and the armed forces; community languages and culture; housing; ethnic minority appointments to public bodies; the terms of reference of the advisory council; the citizens charter; and ethnic monitoring in the criminal justice system.

I attach great importance to the work of the advisory council and welcome its contribution to current issues of policy.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress he has made since September in achieving continuity and speed in the work of mine clearance in the north of Somalia, Republic of Somaliland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1991 Britain made available £300,000 as its contribution to a multi-donor mine clearance operation in northern Somalia, which ended in November 1992. There have been problems in funding the operation. Following interventions by ODA, proposals are being formulated to extend the operation until February 1993 and to resolve the funding difficulties. Meanwhile, we have committed an additional £40,000 to ensure that operations continue. A UNDP mine-clearance coordinator is currently preparing proposals for a new mine clearance project in northern Somalia from February 1993. We shall consider this in due course.

World Bank

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the annual United Kingdom contribution to the World bank.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom's contribution to the World Bank Group in 1990-91 was £159 million and in 1991-92 £228 million.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current position on the 10th replenishment of the World bank's International Development Association.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Negotiations on the size of the tenth replenishment of the International Development Association are continuing. The next meeting is on 14-15 December.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has made to the Wappenhans report on the success rate of World Bank projects.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have welcomed bank management's initial positive response, and its intention to propose further changes to the bank's policies and practices to improve effectiveness.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what voting share the United Kingdom has on the World bank.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom's voting share at the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development is 5·35 per cent.; and at the International Development Association 5·39 per cent.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policy guidance is given to the British executive director of the World bank.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our executive director to the International Monetary Fund and the World bank is provided with policy guidance as appropriate.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to make available access to information about World bank affairs along the lines of that given in the United States under the Pelosi amendment.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: At present the World bank circulates monthly an operational summary containing information about all projects which it is considering for possible financing, and a summary of environmental assessments. As I told the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham) on 8 December, this is available in the House of Commons Library. It also publishes all financial decisions made by the board and a wide range of technical and policy papers. An assessment of any significant environmental impact is made available to non-governmental organisations in the borrowing country well in advance of consideration of the project in the board. We have supported a proposal to make the assessments more widely available.

Narmada Dam, India

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the number of arrests which have occurred in India since 23 October in connection with the Narmada dam project.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We understand that a number of arrests were made in Bombay on 14 November following a demonstration involving members of a local non-government organisation. We understand that all those arrested were released on 17 November.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what British financial or industrial development there is in the Narmada dam project in India.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There have been no construction contracts awarded to British firms. One consultancy contract was awarded to Mott MacDonald for a ground water study in 1983.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs following the recent continuation by the World bank of the Narmada dam project, how the British Government will satisfy themselves that adequate consultation with local people has been held, to avoid violations of the rights of tribal or other affected people.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government's commitment to a resolution of the problems identified in an independent review of the Narmada projects, is demonstrated by our decision to provide up to £1 million of technical co-operation funds to finance work which is aimed at attempting to ensure that the performance benchmarks agreed by the World bank and the Indian authorities are met in full.

As our executive director said at the October board meeting, we believe that, unless there is full and constructive consultation with the people to be affected by the projects, the benchmarks will not be met.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what attention to past and future human rights questions were considered by the independent review of the Narmada dam project in India.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: That is not a matter for Her Majesty's Government. The report has been published.

Sardar Sarovar Projects

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total disbursement of World bank funds on the Sardar Sarovar projects up to the World bank executive directors' meeting on 23 October; what it will be by the April 1993 meeting; and what is the estimated total expenditure.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: World bank loans for the Sardar Sarovar projects amount to $450 million. Disbursements to October 1992 were $230 million and projected disbursements between November 1992 and March 1993 are $40 million.

Mahogany

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has discussed a scheme of certification of mahogany from sustainable sources to apply across all EC points of entry within the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There is no reliable way at present of identifying timber imported from unsustainable sources. Well designed and implemented labelling schemes would enable consumer choice and provide the basis for implementation of import controls, but none exists at present. This view is widely shared by our EC partners. The Overseas Development Administration is supporting work on incentives for sustainable timber production, including labelling schemes, in co-operation with the timber trade and non-governmental organisations.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to identify bona fide producers of mahogany from properly managed sustainable forestry estates; and whether such producers are encouraged to mark and certify their timber as such.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There is at present no reliable means of identifying mahogany or other tropical timber produced from unsustainable sources, or of confirming the authenticity of timber marked or certified as such by producers. Effective identification of timber produced from sustainable sources depends on the introduction of sustainable forest management practices in producer countries and the development of reliable and practical labelling systems. The Overseas Development Administration is supporting both objectives through our forestry programmes and through support to reform of the International Tropical Timber Organisation, which brings together producers and consumers of tropical timber.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the tax expenditure savings if people receiving invalidity benefit were not allowed the option of continuing to receive it during the first five years after reaching state pension age.

Mr. Dorrell: It is estimated that if all recipients over retirement age received taxable retirement pension instead of invalidity benefit the tax yield, at 1992-93 levels, would be about £80 million.

Green Issues

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who in his Department has been appointed to oversee and develop green issues; how many civil servants have been allocated new or additional responsibilities to deal with the management and development of green issues; and what additional allocation of resources has been made to support programmes related to green issues in his Department.

Sir John Cope: I have responsibility for "green issues". Environmental issues are treated as an integral part of policy consideration. As envisaged in the First Year Report on "This Common Inheritance" (Cm 1655), the Treasury has prepared a strategy for environmental "good housekeeping". Resources are allocated as necessary to ensure the efficient despatch of business.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the revenue forgone in his recent extension of reliefs in inheritance tax in a full year; and if he will break down this figure by each category of additional relief.

Mr. Dorrell: The estimated reduction in the yield of inheritance tax for transfers in 1992-93 resulting from the changes to business and agricultural relief made in the Finance (No. 2) Act 1992 is £45 million in a full year. Of this total £25 million relates to the extension of agricultural relief and £20 million to the extension of business relief.

Tobacco and Alcohol Smuggling

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has received regarding the potential annual revenue loss from smuggling tobacco products and alcoholic beverages from European Community member states where the prices of such products are lower, following the completion of the single market; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: The Financial Statement and Budget Report published on 10 March estimated a full year loss of £250 million from increased cross-border shopping in the single market. It is very difficult to estimate the likely scale of smuggling. We are alert to the risks, however, and Customs and Excise have allocated additional staff for inland controls, including intelligence-based targeting and enhanced checks at likely outlets for smuggled goods.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has obtained on the extent of cigarette smuggling into other European Community member states, with particular reference to Germany; what is the likely revenue impact in the United Kingdom following the completion of the single market; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Smuggling of cigarettes takes place in several EC countries—for example, by land into northern Italy and by sea into western Spain. Since German reunification, smuggling has developed between Poland and Germany. The Tobacco Advisory Council has estimated that 10 per cent. of the German and Italian cigarette markets can be attributed to smuggling.

It is difficult to estimate the likely extent of cigarette smuggling into the United Kingdom in the single market. The 1992-93 Financial Statement and Budget Report published in March 1992 contained an estimate of £250 million for the revenue loss associated with the increased levels of legitimate cross-border shopping of all excise goods in the single market.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he will take to protect against revenue loss from the smuggling of tobacco products from lower-taxed European Community member states in the light of the changed role of the law enforcement agencies following the completion of the single market next year.

Sir John Cope: The Finance (No. 2) Act 1992 introduced new offences to meet the threat of increased smuggling of revenue goods following the completion of the single market. The offences carry penalties up to seven years' imprisonment. Customs and Excise are also implementing new control procedures to catch and deter commercial bootleggers, including:

the recruitment and training of 120 excise verification officers for intelligence-based targeting and enhanced checks at likely outlets for smuggled goods; increasing the excise intelligence resources within the customs investigation division; increased mutual assistance with other member states, including the appointment of liaison officers in Netherlands, Belgium and France; and opposing the renewal of "on" and "off" licences, where appropriate, as the result of revenue offences involving the licensee.

VAT (Farmers)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether a decision has been made on the compensation addition for the flat-rate VAT scheme for farmers; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: The flat rate percentage addition will be set at 4 per cent. It is intended to compensate a flat rate farmers for the VAT they spend on purchases, which they cannot reclaim as they are not registered for VAT. There is no restriction on the size of farmer who may qualify for the flat rate scheme. However, as it has been introduced to assist small farmers, a restriction has been written into the scheme to prevent some farmers from making a substantial financial gain. Farmers who would stand to gain £3,000 or more a year over what they would have been able to claim as input tax had they remained registered for VAT will not be able to qualify as flat rate farmers. Small farmers whose annual turnover is £70,000 or less will not be affected by this restriction and it is expected that about 90 per cent. of farmers with a turnover of up to £300,000 will be able to join the scheme if they wish.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Gale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to lay the orders implementing the transitional arrangements for the collection of value added tax after 1 January 1993; and whether all aspects of the new system will come into force at the same time.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 7 December 1992]: The remaining orders implementing the transitional arrangements for the collection of VAT from 1 January 1993 will be laid before the Christmas recess. It is intended that all agreed aspects of the new system will begin on 1 January 1993.

Market Testing

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a timetable showing when he plans to market test those activities listed for testing before 30 September 1993.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 9 December 1992]: "Citizen's Charter, First Report: 1992" (Cm 2101) lists the nine Treasury services to be market tested in 1992-93. These are the library, stationery, reprographics, training, economic model building, consultancy inspections services division, recruitment, internal audit and the Treasury security guard (subject to a review). The timetable for completing the market testing exercise for all nine services, as set out in Cm 2101, is September 1993: not all the services will however be tested simultaneously. A start has already been made on testing the first four listed; the intention is to have completed these by spring 1993.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to which of those of his Department's activities due to be market tested by 30 September 1993, the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the EC acquired rights directive 77/189/EEC will apply.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 9 December 1992]: The application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 (TUPE) and the EC Acquired Rights Directive 77/189/ECC has to be determined in the light of the individual circumstances surrounding each of the services to be market tested. The Treasury is currently considering, in consultation with the Treasury Solicitor's Department, those services in its 1992-93 market testing programmes to which TUPE will apply.

SCOTLAND

Hospitals

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of hospitals in Scotland in 1979, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is shown in the table:

Number of hospitals in Scotland; by type; as at 31st March

Year	[1]NHS	[1,2]Joint user and contractural	[3]Independent acute
1979	348	[4]20	[5]—
1991	289	18	8
1992	283	18	8

1. Hospitals with an approved bed complement.
2. Joint user hospitals are local authority institutions in which accommodation is made available to health boards in terms of the sixth schedule of the National Assistance Act, 1948. Contractual hospitals are institutions where health boards have customer arrangements with voluntary bodies for the use of beds.
3. Institutions subject to the Nursing Homes Registration (Scotland) Act, 1938, of the Mental Health Acts, 1938, or the Mental Health Acts 1960/1984, that provide surgical acute care.
4. As at 30 September 1979.
5. Not available.

Council Tax

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the £28 million for council tax transitional relief will be allocated to each band.

Mr. Stewart: No specific allocation will be made to each band. Relief will be awarded in accordance with the rules of the scheme which will be implemented under regulations which will be laid before the House.

Training

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what public expenditure provision has been made available in respect of expenditure in 1993-94 by Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise on youth training and the new training for work programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The provision derived from the Great Britain planning figures for the relevant programmes in 1993-94 which has been included in the total budgets proposed for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise, is as follows:

£ million

	Youth training	Training for work programme
Scottish Enterprise	78·7	86·5
Highlands and Islands Enterprise	5·6	5·2

The formulae for deriving the figures for 1993-94 from the Great Britain planning totals for the relevant programmes concentrate on labour market indicators. Scotland, which has the lowest unemployment rate of the four countries of the United Kingdom, is receiving over 10 per cent. of the provision for Great Britain compared to its 8·9 per cent. share of unemployment.

Provision for youth training takes account of demographic trends and estimated staying on rates for potential schoolleavers. It will remain a contractual requirement for local enterprise companies to meet the Government's youth training guarantee.

The training for work programme will provide broadly the same number of opportunities for unemployed people in Scotland in 1993-94 as are being provided by the employment training programme in the current year.

In addition to the specific funds for training, local enterprise companies have access to operating surpluses and can use the general arrangements for transferring resources within their budgets if necessary.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what decisions were taken by Her Majesty's Government on 19 July 1990 in regard to export control guidelines for Iraq.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 9 December 1992 at column 660 to the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain).

Yugoslavia

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when it is planned that the airport at Tuzla should be opened for humanitarian aid deliveries.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has no plans to open Tuzla airport at this time.

According to the European Community monitoring mission, the town is supplied efficiently by a system of land convoys to and from central Bosnia and food is not scarce.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is yet in possession of evidence which can form the basis for trial by the International Court of Justice of persons responsible for, and participating in, the operation of concentration camps for Muslim people in Serbia and Bosnia.

Mr. Goodlad: No. But we are considering how best to gather substantiated evidence of breaches of international humanitarian law committed in the former Yugoslavia, to submit to the United Nations Commission of Experts in Geneva (established by United Nations Security Council Resolution 780).

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the numbers of prisoners in concentration camps run by the Serbian authorities.

Mr. Goodlad: The International Red Cross (ICRC) estimate that 4,100 are currently held in detention camps run by the Bosnian Serbs.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) which factors in the environmentally sensitive area programme account for the savings to common agricultural policy expenditure, in order of their costs;

(2) if he will collate and tabulate the total savings in common agricultural policy expenditure arising from the environmentally sensitive area scheme since its inception per year and in total for each scheme and for England as a whole.

Mr. Gummer: The environmentally sensitive area schemes (ESAs) generally encourage more extensive farming systems, but the main provisions generating savings in common agricultural policy payments are those encouraging reversion from arable production to grassland and reductions in livestock grazing. Savings arising in the first five ESAs introduced in 1987 are recorded in the published monitoring reports deposited in the Library. The reports for the remaining ESAs introduced in 1988 will be published shortly.

Cereals

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of weighted average yields for cereals in each EC country.

Mr. Curry: Based on information from Eurostat the weighted average yields for cereals (in tonnes per hectare and excluding rice) in each EC member state in 1991 were as follows:

	Average Yield
Belgium	6·57
Denmark	5·88
Germany	5·99
Greece	4·17
Spain	2·41
France	6·54
Ireland	6·26
Italy	4·24
Luxembourg	5·10
Netherlands	6·99
Portugal	1·43
United Kingdom	6·46
EC 12	5·03

Fishing Industry

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the effect on employment in the fishing industry as a result of meeting the latest multi-annual guidance targets in respect of (a) beam trawl, (b) demersal trawl, (c) nephrope trawl, (d) seiners and (e) shellfish mobile.

Mr. Curry: The aim of the latest multi-annual guidance programme targets is to bring the various segments of the fleet into a better balance with the fish stocks that they exploit. A detailed breakdown of employment in the various segments of the fleet is not available but it is inevitable that fleet reductions, through decommissioning which the industry has demanded, will mean some loss of jobs in the industry. However, if stocks are allowed to collapse the jobs of all fishermen will be at risk.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what permission he has sought for the slaughter of casualty livestock in excess of the weekly quota subject to derogation under EC requirements;

(2) whether he will seek to exclude casualty livestock from the 12 livestock unit allowance for small slaughterhouses.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 8 December 1992]: As my right hon. Friend the Minister told the House on 2 December, Official Report, columns 223-24, he is arranging for the Council of Agriculture Ministers to discuss the question of small slaughterhouses at its meeting on 14-16 December.

I recognise the importance of ensuring that suitable facilities are available for the slaughter of animals which are suspected of being diseased or injured, and the State Veterinary Service will monitor the position carefully. Officials will take a sensible approach towards isolated instances where the weekly throughput limit is exceeded because of any emergency slaughter.

TRANSPORT

European Passenger Services Ltd.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has reached on the method of transferring European Passenger Services Ltd. to the private sector.

Mr. Freeman: Options for transferring international services to the private sector are under discussion within British Rail and Government. It is too early to say when we will be in a position to make decisions on the way forward.

Channel Tunnel

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that domestic commuter rail services are not curtailed on either the Tonbridge or the Maidstone East line to London in order to make way for through channel tunnel passenger trains.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail gave an assurance to Parliament during the passage of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987 to the effect that existing domestic services would not be adversely affected by the introduction of international services through the channel tunnel. British Rail has every intention of standing by that assurance.

Network SouthEast

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will maintain the subsidy paid to Network SouthEast at its current level in real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The specific allocation of the planned external financing limits for British Rail between 1993-94 and 1995-96 between grant and borrowing has yet to be agreed and will be announced, as usual, in due course.

Construction Materials

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will require independent quality assurance certification for both the manufacture and the erection of any structural steelwork imported for use in the construction of any major transport construction projects, including the second Severn bridge crossing and the second M6 Thelwall viaduct.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The supply, fabrication and erection of the steelwork for Departmental schemes must comply with the Department's Specification for Highway Works and the national bridge code British Standard 5400. There are no specific independent quality assurance certification requirements for the fabrication of steelwork in the Specification at present, but the Department will shortly be discussing with the British Constructional Steelwork Association (BCSA) the recognition of an independent QA scheme for structural steelwork. Once a scheme has been recognised it will be included in the specification for future projects.

The second Severn crossing is a privately financed project, although it must comply with the Department's requirements. There is a specific requirement for QA for the project. A QA scheme was proposed by Laing/GTM and approved by the Government agent, who will from time to time check compliance. The steelwork subcontractor's own QA scheme may be accepted, if it is deemed to be equal to that of Laing/GTM.

While there is no specific QA requirement for Thelwall viaduct, full compliance with the Specification will be insured by inspection and testing of both the fabrication process and the steelwork itself. If the latter is produced abroad, this checking will be carried out by the Department's representative in the country of manufacture, as well as during site erection.

Rail Traffic

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes have occurred during the last 10 years in the share and volume of traffic carried on railways within the United Kingdom; and what detailed policies he is pursuing to promote this form of transportation.

Mr. Freeman: Figures for rail passenger and freight traffic are published in tables 1.1 and 1.9 of Transport Statistics Great Britain 1992 (HMSO), a copy of which is in the Library.

Rail passenger kilometres increased by 12 per cent. between 1981 and 1991 while tonne kilometres fell by 13 per cent. The rail share of passenger kilometres fell slightly from 7 to 6 per cent. while the rail share of tonne kilometres fell from 10 to 7 per cent.

The White Paper, "New Opportunities for the Railways" published in July 1992, set out the Government's proposals for making better use of railways.

Railways (Orders)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the publicly-owned railways orders for (a) signalling, (b) rolling stock and (c) other capital spending (i) made and (ii) for work in each year from 1984 to 1996.

Mr. Freeman: The information is not available in the form requested. The table shows the figures for investment in railway rolling stock and infrastructure for the years 1985-86 to 1991-92.

Notes:

1. Other rail comprises London Underground, Docklands Light Railway, Manchester Light Rapid Transport and South Yorkshire Supertram.
2. Figures for other rail rolling stock include an allowance for investment in wagons privately owned by BR customers. However, as information is only available on end year stock, estimates have been made based on this and assumptions on scrappage rates and the cost of a private wagon. The resultant estimates have a large range of error. Therefore, an estimate, £50 million per annum, an average based on the last five years, has been calculated and included as a tentative estimate.

A6, Stockport

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to hold the further public inquiry into the A6 Stockport north-south bypass.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Not before next autumn. We are currently looking at the design of the Offerton road junction in order to reduce its impact. This work is taking longer than expected. I am conscious of the need to keep any further delays to a minimum.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by grade and office, the number of staff employed by the Vehicle Inspectorate agency.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Following is a list by grade and office, showing the number of full-time and part-time staff currently employed by the Vehicle Inspectorate.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Driving Standards Agency's staff in post at 31 October 1992 is shown in the attached table by DSA regional or HQ location. Part-time staff are included as full-time equivalents.

Casualty Reduction Schemes

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money he is allocating to casualty reduction schemes by local highway authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Secretary of State will announce the amount shortly, as part of the transport supplementary grant settlement.

Vehicle Testing Stations

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether safety will be the prime issue in determining the future of vehicle testing stations following his consultation paper;

(2) what criteria he will use to assess the various options for the future of vehicle testing stations contained in his consultation paper;

(3) how many responses he has had to his consultation paper on options for the future of vehicle testing stations; what types of organisation have responded; and what were their views;

(4) what other options he considered before issuing his consultation paper on the future of vehicle testing stations; and for what reasons they were rejected;

(5) what steps he took to (a) inform the general public about and (b) to circulate his consultation paper on options for the future of vehicle testing stations;

(6) when he expects to make an announcement on the future of vehicle testing stations following his consultation paper on options for the future.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 10 December 1992]: As part of the review of the Vehicle Inspectorate's framework document my right hon. Friend re-examined the scope for abolition, privatisation and contracting out. Abolition, and the privatisation of the agency's enforcement activities, were judged to be inappropriate. A public consultation paper was issued on 14 September 1992 and sought views from a range of motor transport, safety, staff and other interests. There was an accompanying press notice. There have been 55 responses from organisations and individuals representing motor transport industry, police, road safety, motoring, local authority, environmental, staff and other groups; my right hon. Friend and I have also received correspondence from 68 hon. and right hon. Members. Comments dealt with cost, road safety and staff issues, and the availability of testing services. A variety of views were expressed for and against each option.

My right hon. Friend is currently considering the responses and representations and will make an announcement in due course. Road safety remains a key Government objective; as the consultation paper makes clear, we are determined that the standard of vehicle testing under all options should be maintained and, where possible, improved.

Drink Driving

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to extend the availability of the Christmas and new year drink driving wrecks lives campaign on television so as to reach a wider audience; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department of Transport's drinking and driving wrecks lives commercial is running on television throughout December.

To extend the campaign to reach a wider audience I should particularly like to acknowledge the initiative of the Portman Group, an organisation funded by the drinks industry to promote sensible drinking, who have paid for the screening of the Department's commercial in cinemas in Great Britain and Northern Ireland in December and January.

The Department makes every effort to ensure that its campaign message reaches the broadest possible audience and liaises with local authority road safety officers, the police, voluntary bodies and private sector organisations. I welcome their involvement in taking forward the campaign.

British Rail

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards the relative weight to be given to the provision for passenger traffic and for freight traffic in British Rail's objectives and investment plans.

Mr. Freeman: The objectives set by the Government for British Rail for the three years to March 1993 can be found in the board's annual report and accounts for 1989-90. My right hon. Friend will in due course be setting objectives for the period from 1 April 1993. The Government attach great importance to the efficient provision of both passenger and freight services.

WALES

Training

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many training places have been made available by each training and enterprise council in Wales for special needs trainees in each of the last three years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: TECs have not yet been in existence for three years and comparable information is only available by TEC for the 1991-92 financial year.

The information available is for numbers of those with special needs starting training rather than numbers of training places, and is provided in the following table.

Special training needs starts

TEC	1991-92
Gwent	849
Mid Glamorgan	933
North East Wales	214
North West Wales	727
Powys	299
South Glamorgan	680
West Wales	2,660

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been allocated for employment training special needs programmes by each training and enterprise council in Wales in each of the last three years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not available because within the overall unit price for employment training negotiated with training and enterprise councils, they are required to ensure that suitable high quality training is available for all trainees who are shown by assessment to have disabilities or other significant personal disadvantages which give rise to special training needs.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the average unit cost per month of training young people on youth training schemes in Wales in each of the last five years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is set out in the table.

Youth training

Travel-to-Work Areas (Employment)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were employed in each travel-to-work area in Wales in (a) agriculture, (b) production, (c) construction, (d) service industries and (e) total, at the most recent available date.

Mr. David Hunt: Data for travel-to-work areas can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library, subject to the confidentiality restrictions of the Statistics of Trade Act 1947.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people with schizophrenia in Wales have killed themselves or been convicted of manslaughter after returning to the community since April 1991.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Apart from those who have discharged themselves voluntarily, only a small number of long-stay patients have been discharged. This has only been on the basis of medical and other appropriate professional advice and where a care plan and appropriate alternative facilities are in place.

Farmers

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the total payments made to farmers for each year encompassing existing and new entrants as a whole within each designated environmentally sensitive area and for Wales in total.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

ESA payments to farmers

Financial year	Cambrians (original) (came into operation 1 March 1987) £	Cambrians (extension) (came into operation 1 January 1988) £	Lleyn Peninsula (came into operation 1 January 1988) £	Wales total £

Bellwin Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how he defines eligible expenditure under the Bellwin scheme; and if he has reviewed his definition in the light of the circumstances surrounding the recent flooding in Wales;

(2) when and how he formally announced that Bellwin assistance would be made available to Welsh local authorities; on what date relevant expenditure became eligible; and when he proposes the closing date for applications for assistance submitted under the present scheme;

(3) if he will allow capital expenditure on repair and replacement work to be eligible for Welsh Office funding under the Bellwin formula;

(4) if he will make a statement on the application of the Bellwin formula in providing assistance to Welsh local authorities following the recent flooding;

(5) on what basis he calculates the threshold level for financial assistance under the Bellwin scheme; and if he will publish a table showing the current threshold levels for local authorities in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government are applying the Bellwin scheme for emergency financial assistance for local authorities affected by flood and storm damage following the severe weather in Wales last week.

My officials are writing to confirm to county and district councils in south Wales that they are entitled to claim grant at the rate of 85 per cent. on eligible expenditure above a prescribed threshold. Eligible expenditure includes emergency works to safeguard life and property, damage clearance and repairs arising from the floods and storms between 30 November and 2 December. Capital works are not eligible for grant. Emergency works under the scheme need to be completed by 1 February 1993. Initial claims should be submitted by 1 March 1993 and final audited claims by 1 June 1993.

Since 1990-91, thresholds for the Bellwin scheme have been calculated on the basis of £2.00 (1990-91) per adult on the community charge register, uprated by the annual September increase in the retail price index, and apportioned between county and district authorities according to their tier shares based on standard spending assessments. I will be placing a table showing thresholds for each local authority in the Library of the House, together with a copy of the letter to south Wales authorities referred to above.

EC Environment Council

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will attend the Environment Council of the EC meeting on 15 and 16 December to represent Welsh environmental interests.

Mr. David Hunt: I will not be attending the December meeting of the EC Environment Council; in accordance with long established practice, the environmental interests of the United Kingdom will be represented at that meeting by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Traffic Survey, Caernarfon

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he was given the traffic figures arising out of his traffic survey undertaken in the vicinity of Caernarfon in the early summer of 1992 in relation to a possible outer bypass from Griffith's Crossing on the A487; if he will now make these figures available to Gwynedd county council; and if he intends to publish them.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I am expecting to be advised of the main conclusions of the traffic survey shortly. It is not intended to publish the figures but the relevant traffic information will be made available to Gwynedd county council when I make my announcement on the outcome of the investigations.

EC Agriculture Council

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will attend the Agricultural Council of the EC meeting between 14 and 16 December to represent Welsh farmers.

Mr. David Hunt: I will not be attending the meeting of the Agriculture Council. In line with long established practice, my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food takes the lead in European community discussions and negotiations. I know that my right hon. Friend has the interests of Welsh farmers clearly in mind in that context and I am in regular contact with him.

Business Rates

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce an incentive for local authorities to notify the Valuation Office of new non-domestic property in their area to ensure that rating lists are kept up to date.

Mr. David Hunt: I am introducing arrangements which will allow billing authorities to retain until the end of the year the benefit of any additional rates they collect when non-domestic property is improved or first included in the rating list. This change should give authorities more incentive to notify the Valuation Office quickly of any new or improved property in their area. The new provisions will be made in regulations which will be laid shortly and will apply from 1 April 1993.

ENVIRONMENT

Pest Bird Licensing System

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what mechanisms he will put in place to monitor operation of the pest bird licensing system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Monitoring will be an integral part of the pest bird licensing system. The Government's statutory scientific advisers, the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, will set up the monitoring arrangements and will report their findings annually to my Department. The report will identify changes in overall population levels and distribution of the species.

Waste

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on Government policy regarding the importation of recyclable waste material from packaging from European sources;

(2) what representations he has received regarding the dumping of recyclable waste from packaging;

(3) what consideration the Government have given to reducing the levels of imported recyclable waste from Germany;

(4) what representations he has received in respect of the impact of German packaging legislation and the Duales Systems Deutschland on European and United Kingdom markets for recyclable materials.

Mr. Maclean: The Government believe that the movement of waste for recovery, which provides valuable substitutes for raw materials, should continue, subject to the appropriate environmental controls.

However, my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry have received a considerable number of representations from British companies and others about restrictions on trade and the distortion of competition resulting from the 1991 German Packaging Ordinance. Many representations relate to the distortion of competition in the markets for recyclable materials. The Government share the concerns expressed in these representations. We have therefore formally asked the European Commission to consider whether the German measures contravene the provisions of the treaty of Rome on trade and competition; and will continue to press for an early decision by the Commission.

The Government are also negotiating for a harmonising European directive on packaging and packaging waste, to prevent member states from erecting trade barriers or distorting competition.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is Government policy regarding the use of United Kingdom landfill sites for the dumping of European waste.

Mr. Maclean: The Government's policy is that developed countries should be self-sufficient and dispose of their own waste. The new EC Waste Shipments Regulation which was agreed on 20 October will enable member states to ban imports for final disposal from other member states unless they produce hazardous waste in such a small quantity that it would be uneconomic for that country to provide their own specialised disposal facilities.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Government propose to adopt the Duales Systems Deutschland in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: We have no current plans to do so. However, the Government is currently considering whether the economic framework for recycling and waste in the United Kingdom should be modified. We intend to publish a consultants' report on economic instruments for solid waste shortly and aim to announce our conclusions later in 1993.

Private Water Supplies

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to impose taxes in respect of private water supplies.

Mr. Maclean: None. We announced, however, in "This Common Inheritance: The Second Year Report" in October that we are preparing a consultation paper on charging for water abstraction: that would need to explain to what extent any proposals would apply to private water supplies.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to abolish the client contribution element of the home energy efficiency scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Energy Efficiency Office has received representations recommending the abolition of the client contribution. Abolition would mean that the size of individual claims for grant would increase and that fewer households could benefit overall from the scheme.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households have been assisted under the home energy efficiency scheme in each region in each year since the scheme began; and what level of expenditure, as a total and percentage of the national total, has been undertaken by region.

Mr. Maclean: For 1991-92, the only full year of the scheme so far, the figures are:

	Number of homes	Grant paid £000s	Grant paid as percentage of total (rounded)
Scotland	34,391	3,762	15·8
North East	14,822	1,724	7·2

West Midlands	26,650	3,780	15·9
Yorkshire and Humberside	22,683	2,904	12·2

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the environment what has been the expenditure on the home energy efficiency scheme in each region; and what was the budget allocation for each region in each year since the scheme began.

Mr. Maclean: There are no regional allocations under the home energy efficiency scheme; allocations are made to individual installers. In 1991-92, the first full year of operation, the expenditure in each of the scheme's administrative regions was:

	Grant paid £000s
Scotland	3,762
North East	1,724
North West	3,401
East Midlands	3,057
London	804
South East	1,593
South West	1,227
Wales	1,501
West Midlands	3,780
Yorkshire and Humberside	2,904

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of jobs undertaken under the home energy efficiency scheme have cost more than the maximum grant figure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The grant maxima for allowable work under the home energy efficiency scheme were increased on 1 April this year. Since then the proportions of claims in excess of the grant maxima have been, for draughtproofing 21 per cent. and for loft insulation 14 per cent.

Air Pollution Monitoring

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the monitoring reference manual being produced by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to give guidance to local authorities on industrial air pollution monitoring techniques will be published; how much the manual has cost to produce; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The monitoring reference manual is now being prepared for publication by HMSO in the new year. It will appear as one of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's new series of technical guidance notes, and its full title will be "Monitoring of emissions of pollutants at source". This guidance note is based on a report produced on contract by Warren Spring Laboratory at a cost of £26,400. Further costs of production will be borne on the overall budget for HMIP's research and publication programme.

A copy of this report will be placed in the House Library as soon as it is published.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to issue regulations under section 143 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 governing the compilation of public registers of land which may be contaminated; when the regulations will take effect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We are grateful to the more than 450 individuals and organisations who responded to our consultation paper and draft regulations under section 143 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 for registers of contaminative uses of land. We are carefully considering these responses before deciding the next steps on the proposed regulations and their terms and application.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Imports

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what international agreements the United Kingdom is party to which encourage discrimination against imported products which are produced by (a) slave labour and (b) child labour; and what representations he has had in 1992 on this subject.

Mr. Needham: No international agreements encourage discrimination of this sort. There are severe practical difficulties in identifying goods allegedly produced using such labour given the varied and complex channels of production and distribution which exist in international trade. My Department receives occasional representations that goods produced under such conditions represent unfair trade.

Coal Industry (Redundancies)

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) whether the present redundancy scheme for coal miners will be extended beyond the current March deadline for all those collieries in the current moratorium on closure;

(2) what plans he has to improve the present redundancy scheme for coal miners.

Mr. Eggar: Details of British Coal's redundancy schemes are a matter for British Coal.

Toys

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what has been the quota of toys made in China that have been allowed into the United Kingdom in each of the last five years;

(2) what is the present yearly quota of toys made in China that is allowed into the EC.

Mr. Needham: There are no Community-wide quotas on toys imported from China. Two member states impose national quotas. The United Kingdom does not do so.

Mining Records

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the reasons for the transfer of mining records from the keeping of the British geological survey to his Department; and what arrangements are being made to make them available to the public.

Mr. Eggar: I have no plans to transfer any mining records from the keeping of the British geological survey to my Department. British Coal is under a statutory obligation to make available plans of coal workings in its possession.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will estimate the effect on the public sector borrowing requirement, employment and emissions of substituting coal generation of electricity for Magnox stations.

Mr. Eggar: These issues are relevant to the review currently being undertaken by my Department. I cannot pre-judge the outcome of the review.

Nuclear Policy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what matters with regard to nuclear policy were discussed and decided upon at the European Energy Council on 30 November.

Mr. Eggar: Nuclear research and development matters are dealt with by the Research Council. Nuclear policy issues have in recent years been dealt with by the Foreign Affairs Council. The Energy Council on 30 November did not discuss any nuclear-related issues.

Oil Exploration Cardigan Bay

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will revoke the licence granted to Hamilton Oil to drill in Cardigan Bay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Hamilton Oil is the operating company on licences granted in the 12th offshore round on blocks 107/1 and 107/6, which lie northwest of the Lleyn peninsula. It recently received approval to drill one exploratory well in block 107/1. Hamilton is not in breach of any aspect of these licences, nor of the special conditions attached to them. There are therefore no grounds on which these licences can be revoked.

Industrial Electricity

Mr. Churchill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade by how much in percentage terms industrial electricity prices have increased between April 1989 and April 1992 in respect of (a) large users, greater than 10 MW and (b) small users, less than 10 MW.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 10 December 1992]: The available information is for four sizes of consumer. In real terms the percentage changes in prices between the second quarter of 1989 and the second quarter of 1992 have been as follows:

Size of consumer[1]		Average percentage increase/ decrease[2]
Small	Less than 880 kWh	+9·3
Medium	880 kWh to 8,800 kWh	−11·5
Moderately large	8,800 kWh to 150,000 kWh	−15·9
Extra large	Greater than 150,000 kWh	−11·0

[1] The size bands for consumers are defined in terms of the approximate annual purchases by the consumers within them.
[2] The percentage increase/decrease has been converted to real terms by excluding the effect of general inflation as measured by the GDP deflator at market prices.

Source: Energy Trends table 25.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the average price paid for electricity by large industrial electricity consumers (over 10 MW per site); and what are the equivalent tariffs among the United Kingdom's principal EC competitors.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 10 December 1992]: The available information is given below. The prices relate to a standard consumer of 50 gigawatt hours per annum with a maximum demand of 10 megawatts for 5,000 hours a year. Prices are as at 1 July 1992 and have been calculated using average rates of exchange for July 1992.

	ECUs per 100 kilowatt hours	Pence per kilowatt hour
Netherlands	4·41	3·15
Luxembourg	4·62	3·30
France	4·81	3·44
Belgium	4·87	3·48
Greece	5·21	3·72
Ireland	5·27	3·76
United Kingdom	5·40	3·86
Italy	7·09	5·06
Spain	7·92	5·66
Germany	8·14	5·81
Denmark	8·22	5·87
Portugal	8·27	5·91

Source: Eurostat: Rapid Report Energy and Industry 1992/31.

It should be noted that prices paid by consumers using more than 50 gigawatt hours per annum, both in the United Kingdom and overseas, may vary according to the size of consumer and their pattern of use.

Coal Reserves

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to publish estimates of the recoverable reserves from each of the 31 pits on the closure lists before any of them are closed.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 10 December 1992]: The recoverable coal reserves at individual pits are a matter for British Coal. J. T. Boyd Company are considering the extent of the recoverable reserves at the 21 pits which are being examined by the coal review. Their conclusions will be published early in the New Year.

Post Office

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the Post Office's negative external finance limits for each year since 1979-80 up to and including the new plans to 1995-96; and what is the cumulative total at constant prices to 1992-93.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 10 December 1992]: The actual and planned negative external financing limits of the Post Office for the period are as follows:

Actual	£ million
1979-80	34·0
1980-81	7·7
1981-82	13·4
1982-83	59·7
1983-84	61·5
1984-85	99·5
1985-86	74·7
1986-87	93·1
1987-88	80·0
1988-89	102·0
1989-90	101·9
1990-91	nil
1991-92	74·0
Planned
1992-93	66·0
1993-94	181·0
1994-95	176·0
1995-96	158·0

The cumulative total from 1979-80 to 1995-96, expressed in 1991-92 prices, would be £1,636·129 million.

Grants and Loans

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total value of grants and loans that authorities in the Wirral and Chester travel-to-work area have received since 1984; how much of this money has been regional selective assistance, regional enterprise grants, regional development grants, expenditure by the English Industrial Estates Corporation or other sources; or if he will provide the information by local authority.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 3 November 1992]: No grants and/or loans made by the Department to authorities in the Wirral and Chester travel-to-work area take the form of regional selective assistance, regional enterprise grants and/or regional development grants. Information on any other form of grants or loans by my Department to such authorities could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 215

SESSION 1992–93

30th November—11th December 1992

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
